DEFEAT ON LAND

Russians Said to Have Lost 16,000 Men in Battle Near Kaiping.

RUSSIAN GENERAL'S REPORT

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

CHEFOO, June 25.—The Russian Port Arthur squadron is practically destroyed so far as its ability to do anything in the way of the offensive is concerned.

On Thursday, Admiral Prince Oukhtomsky, under orders, made an attempt to break the Japanese blockade with his entire force. As soon as he came out of the harbor he was sighted by the Japanese scout boats and began to close in with his full force.

Early Thursday night he found the Japanese fleet, comprising 10 battleships and cruisers and five torpedo craft, outside the harbor, but well within the range of the shore forts. The torpedo flotilla was sent in to the attack and the main attack was made on the battleship Peresviet, which flew the flag of Admiral Oukhtomsky. Two torpedoes struck the big battleship almost simultaneously and she went down almost immediately. The reports reaching here say that hardly any of her crew of 750 men were saved, and that the Russian admiral went down with his ship.

Second Battleship Crippled.

Under the combined fire of the fleet and the forts, the Japanese torpedo flotilla was driven off, not, however, until they had put out of action another battleship, believed to be the Sevastopol, and a big cruiser, the Diana. About this time the heavy ships of Togo's squadron came within range and under their fire the remaining Russian vessels put back into Port Arthur, with several others of their vessels injured by Japanese shells.

The result of the sea action was at once communicated by wireless telegraph to the Japanese general commanding the forces ashore, and a strong attack on the land defenses was begun. What the result of this movement has been is not definitely known, but it is believed, from reports received here, that the Japanese have made material gains on the land side.

There was firing at Port Arthur last night, June 24, and tonight the booming of big guns was distinctly heard here. Eight Japanese transports have been seen going west along the Korean coast.

Report of Great Battle.

CHICAGO, June 25.—A special to the Daily News from Tientsin, says:

Officers arriving at Niuchwang from the front say that the battle fought on Thursday at Simenting, about 40 miles east of Kaiping, was the hardest blow the Russians have yet received. The Muscovites lost, according to these accounts, 16,000 in killed, wounded, missing and prisoners. That the Russian retreat did not turn into a rout was due to the dogged bravery of the Ninth East Siberian rifle brigade, under Gen. Krondratavitch, who covered the flying troops, contesting every inch of the way.

LONDON, June 25.—The Japanese legation this afternoon received a dispatch from Tokyo announcing that a detachment of the Takushan army surprised and routed a squadron of Russian cavalry 10 miles northwest of San-Tao-Kow on the Ta-Che-Kiao road at dawn June 23 and also occupied the heights north thereof, expelling the Russians, who left 60 dead on the field.

Togo Tells of Sea Fight.

TOKYO, June 25.—Admiral Togo reports that on Thursday last, June 23, his patrol boat discovered the battleship Peresviet and seven other vessels accompanied by nine torpedo boat destroyers near the entrance of Port Arthur harbor. They warned him by wireless and he immediately advanced his entire fleet except those engaged upon special duty. The admiral then discovered that the Russian fleet, which consisted of six battleships, five cruisers and 14 destroyers, evidently planned a dash southward by sundown.

The Russians stopped outside the entrance to the harbor and, after nightfall, a fleet of Japanese torpedo boat destroyers resolutely attacked the Russian ships and succeeded in torpedoing and sinking a battleship of the Perseviet type and disabled the battleship Sevastopol. A cruiser of the Diana type was observed being towed into the harbor on Friday morning and it was evident that she had sustained serious damage. The

GEN. N. A. MILES AGREES TO RUN

Soldier and Preacher to Be Prohibitionist National Candidates.

TICKET DECIDED ON

Lieutenant General Writes John G. Woolley That He Will Not Decline the Honor.

JONES FOR VICE PRESIDENT

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

CHICAGO, June 25.—For president, Gen. Nelson A. Miles; for vice president, Samuel P. Jones.

That will be the ticket nominated by the national Prohibition convention, which will convene in Indianapolis next Tuesday. Positive assurance that Gen. Miles will accept the nomination was given in a letter received from him today by the Hon. John G. Woolley of Chicago.

At the Illinois Prohibition headquarters, 92 LaSalle street, it was also declared today that 10 days ago Gen. Miles held a conference with Mr. Woolley at the Auditorium hotel, during which the general made the statement that if the nomination were given him he would not decline it. Enough votes have been pledged to Gen. Miles to make his nomination on the first ballot certain.

That the Rev. Samuel P. Jones of Georgia will be the nominee for vice president, was also definitely announced at the Illinois headquarters today.

"Jones has the solid support of the south and east," declared State Chairman Alonzo E. Wilson, "and there is no doubt but that he will get the nomination."

Gen. Miles' name will be presented to the convention by the Rev. Charles A. Crane, pastor of the Peoples temple, Boston, and the nomination will be seconded by John G. Woolley.

"Owing to his military position, Gen. Miles has not voted for 20 years, but some months ago he made a positive declaration that he was a Prohibitionist," said State Chairman Wilson. "Ever since then we have been trying to prevail on him to accept the nomination, as we regard him as a man of great strength and popularity. Ten days ago, in Chicago, he made his first promise that he would not decline the nomination and in his letter to Mr. Woolley today he repeats the promise. You can say positively that the ticket will be Miles and Jones."

Mrs. Oliver W. Stewart of Hyde Park will be the only woman delegate from Illinois, although several of the other states will be represented by women. Two special trains will leave Chicago Tuesday morning for the convention, and hundreds of other Chicagoans will go later. The convention will adjourn Thursday afternoon.

An effort was made by Gen. Miles to have the convention postponed until after the Democratic national convention, but the party leaders refused to accede to his wishes on this point.

TWO KILLED AND TWO WOUNDED IN FIGHT

Army Deserter Shot Farm Hand and Chief of Police Before He Died.

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., June 25.—Two men were killed and two seriously wounded today in a street fight with revolvers, the result of a quarrel between two harvest hands.

THE DEAD:
WILLIAM HAMMOND, farm hand.
GEORGE P. COLE, army deserter.

THE WOUNDED:
CHARLES F. ZELEY, newspaper man, Minneapolis.
JOSEPH BESSER.

George P. Cole, a deserter from the Thirtieth infantry, who had been employed on a farm near this city, became involved in a quarrel with William Hammond, another farm hand, and without a word of warning shot him through the heart.

Cole, with the revolver in his hand, passed through the main business streets of the city, which were crowded at the time with women and children, warning everyone to keep away from him. A force of policemen hurried to the scene and about 40 shots were exchanged. Charles F. Zely, a newspaper man of Minneapolis, and Joseph Besser were wounded.

Cole took refuge in a private dwelling, and when Chief of Police Taylor entered and called upon him to surrender he shot twice at the officers, who returned the fire, laying Cole low with a bullet in the temple. He died within two hours.

Coming Right to a Head.

STEEL PLANTS WILL BE BUSY

Mills at Homestead, Braddock and Duquesne Got Many Orders.

TO RUN ALL SUMMER

Restriction of Production Will Be Just Sufficient to Prevent Accumulation of Stocks.

AXLE WORKS WILL START

The Duquesne, Edgar Thomson and Homestead works of the Carnegie Steel Company are to be busy all summer, it is authoritatively stated in New York. These mills have orders sufficient to keep them actively at work throughout the summer and early fall. The Howard axle works of the Carnegie Steel Company at Homestead, which has been shut down in nearly every department for several weeks, owing to a lack of orders, will resume in full tomorrow. During the week sufficient orders have been received to keep the plant in operation for several months.

One leading cause of the activity of the Carnegie Steel Company is the placing of orders by the various railroad companies for equipment. The Pressed Steel Car Company has orders for about 5,000 cars to fill and the plates for these cars are being made by the Carnegie Steel Company. As a steel car requires about 10 tons of plates, these orders mean 50,000 tons of plates to be made.

It is announced that the Harriman lines, through the Union Pacific, have placed an order for 25,000 tons of steel rails and the Seaboard air line has ordered 10,000 tons.

Other railroads are beginning to place the orders which have been delayed until this time, and the result is a brightening of the outlook to a marked degree.

At the same time care is being taken that the mills and furnaces shall not be allowed to accumulate stocks of large size. It has been the experience in the past that such stocks are more demoralizing than lack of business. When the turn for the better comes they are on hand to prevent prices rising to the point which would be reached were the product still to be made. The result is a sale at a lower price than the company could realize under other conditions with the same expenditure for labor.

With this idea in view, on July 1 the corporation will close its Bessemer mills at Youngstown, and its Donora plant, which has never been operated, will continue idle until fall. The Bessemer plants of the corporation at Mingo Junction, at Columbus, at Cleveland, and the Schoenberger plant at Pittsburgh are idle. The open-hearth furnaces at Sharon are idle, while those at South Sharon are operating only about one-third of their capacity. Its 20 idle stacks will soon be increased by the regular closing on July 1.

Through these reductions the corporation aims to bring about the necessary curtailment of production which through July and August will probably reach 50 per cent.

Treaty With Russia Signed.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 25.—Ambassador McCormick and Foreign Minister Lamsdorff signed the corporation treaty today. This was Mr. McCormick's last official act before leaving on his vacation tomorrow. Accompanied by his wife the ambassador will make a tour of northern Russia and then start for Carlsbad.

THE POPE AND SULTAN SEND GIFTS FOR THE FAIR BRIDE

Civil Ceremony Uniting Miss Leishman and Her French Fiance Is a Notable Social Event in Paris.

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

PARIS, June 25.—Today was performed the civil ceremony uniting in the bonds of wedlock Miss Martha Leishman, daughter of John G. A. Leishman, American minister to Turkey, and Count Louis de Voutamp-Piron, a member of one of the oldest families of France. On Tuesday the wedding according to the rites of the church will be solemnized in the church of St. Pierre de Chaillot.

The civil ceremony today, which was a notable event in American and French social circles, took place at Mr. Leishman's residence in the Avenue Du Bois de Boulogne. The witnesses for the bride were Ambassador Horace Porter and Gen. Wilson, and for the groom his two brothers, Counts Antoine and Armand.

The sultan of Turkey sent the bride the grand cordon of the Nichan-I-Chefakat order in diamonds, rubies and emeralds. This is the only order the sultan gives to women and it was bestowed about two years ago on the bride's mother.

The sultan gave the groom the second order of the Medjidie. The other presents received by the bride included a signed medallion from the pope, a gold loving cup from Mrs. Vanderbilt, a diamond crown from Mr. Leishman, a diamond collar from Mrs. Leishman and a gold coffee set from Mrs. Goelet.

The guests included many of the diplomats and members of the French nobility. The groom's family belongs to the old French aristocracy. His father is a director of the Jockey club and a patron of the principal French sports.

GOVERNMENT TO CONTROL WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY

President Appoints a Commission to Investigate Its Operation.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—President Roosevelt today announced the appointment of a special board to investigate the subject of wireless telegraphy as far as its relations to the government in time of war and peace are concerned. The matter was brought out by the action of Russia in her present war with Japan in declaring wireless telegraphy as contraband of war.

It is understood that the commission will investigate the suggestion that all wireless stations and equipment on the coasts of the United States should be under the sole control of the government. The members of the board are Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, Rear Admiral Henry N. Manney, Brig.-Gen. A. W. Greeley, Lieut. Commander Joseph L. Jayne and Prof. Willis T. Moore.

There is a representative from each of the large departments of the government interested in this question, the war department, the navy department, the agricultural department and the department of commerce and labor.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT ISSUES NEW FRAUD ORDER

Alleged Astrologer Is Prohibited from Dispensing Medicine at Boston.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The postoffice department today issued a fraud order against "Prof." George Ruppert of 47 Court street, Boston, and the "American College of Astrology." "Prof." Ruppert is believed to have obtained $10,000 or $15,000 in less than two years. He advertised his alleged knowledge of the occult extensively.

By means of the moon and stars Ruppert said he was enabled to tell exactly what particular disease each of his hundreds of correspondents had. To relieve them, he is said to have bought a medicine from chemists at 60 cents a bottle, which he let his customers have at $4.55 a bottle. There were several other side issues connected with the astrology, which were worth money.

Inspectors found that Ruppert was not president of the American College of Astrology, and there was no such institution in the city.

VAN WYCK SEES CROKER TO URGE CLEVELAND

Wants Support of Former Tammany Boss to Secure Ex-President's Nomination.

[Associated Press Cable to The Gazette.]

LONDON, June 25.—Ex-Mayor Van Wyck of New York and John F. Carroll, who arrived at Liverpool on the Cunard line steamer Campania today, accompanied by a number of New York political friends, reached London tonight and took up their quarters at the Carlton hotel, where many Americans greeted them. Messrs. Van Wyck and Carroll will go to Wantage to see Richard Croker early next week. It is understood that the object of the visit is to urge Mr. Croker to exert his influence on behalf of Grover Cleveland for the presidency. Van Wyck said: "I am practically out of politics, except as a loyal servant of the party, but I put what I think is for the good of the country before the party. It is no secret that I am a Cleveland man. I am going to see Mr. Croker. There is no new political deal on, but it is well to talk over things. After visiting Mr. Croker I shall go for a few weeks to the continent, returning to the United States to participate in the campaign."

JAPANESE LEAD BANDITS IN RAID ON BRIDGE

[Associated Press Cable to The Gazette.]

MUKDEN, June 25.—Last night 100 Chinese bandits, excellently armed and equipped and led by Japanese officers, attempted to blow up with dynamite the bridge over the Koulau river, three miles south of Keerson and 127 miles northeast of Mukden. The attack was repulsed by border scouts.

According to the inhabitants of the vicinity, there have been numerous previous attempts to destroy this bridge. The bandits are said to fight splendidly and to be entirely different from the ill-organized brigands of 1900.

Cholera Among Live Stock.

HUNTINGDON, PA., June 25.—An epidemic of cholera has broken out among the live stock in the lower end of this county and in parts of Fulton county. The bituminous coal miners of the east Broad Top region are the principal sufferers. Nearly 200 of their hogs have died from the disease. An appeal will be made to the state board of agriculture to check the disease. Several cattle are also afflicted.

PERDICARIS TO QUIT MOROCCO

Ransomed American Fears Recapture by Moorish Bandits.

STORY OF ADVENTURE

The Victim of Kidnaping Gives Thrilling Details of Life With Outlaws.

COMING TO UNITED STATES

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

TANGIER, MOROCCO, June 25.—Housed safely once more in his Moorish castle on the heights above Tangier, Ion Perdicaris, ransomed by the Moroccan government from Raisculi, the bandit, today told to your correspondent the story of his captivity.

Mr. Perdicaris has aged considerably as a result of his trying experience. His hair is snow white, and his voice weak and trembling, like a man convalescing from a long illness. But he is cheerful in spirit, this man, whose life long hung in the balance between the government of Morocco and Raisuli, whose kidnaping brought three great nations to the verge of serious differences, and for whose rescue a fleet of 14 modern warships was at one time assembled in the roadstead of Tangier.

There is joy in the house of Perdicaris over his rescue; and in the quarters the native servants have not ceased to rejoice since the master was led here in triumph yesterday afternoon, his ransom paid, and the word of the bandit proved good. It will be interesting to Americans to learn that as a result of his experience Mr. Perdicaris will shortly return to America to make his home among his adopted countrymen. This resolution he formed during the long vigil in the mountain fastnesses of Morocco, to which he was led with his stepson, Varley, by the bandits on the night of May 28.

Adventure Outclasses Romance.

Mr. Varley is in good condition and shows little effects of his long captivity. But, for that matter, both speak in the highest terms of the treatment they received from Raisuli and his men.

The story of the captivity outclasses romance. It will live in literature as one of the most picturesque and thrilling adventures that has fallen to one living in the twentieth century. One must hark back to the middle ages to find its equal in romantic interest.

"Ah," cried Mr. Perdicaris, "it is good to be back again among one's people, to hear English spoken again, and to feel that civilization has returned after this wild month of barbarism. And yet, let me confess that, now that it is all over and I am back among my loved ones and free to move where I please once more, there is sufficient romance and love of adventure still left in me to make me glad that I underwent the experience.

"I do not condone Raisuli's offense. He is a ruffian, a villain, a desperate character whom the state should reduce to subjection, and yet, save that he deprived me of my liberty, forced me to make hard rides over a mountainous country, and kept me in barbaric confinement for a full month, his treatment to me was such as one might expect from a barbarous monarch who was desirous of observing all the conventions, so far as he knew them, toward an honored guest.

Longing for America.

"If the word can be used in speaking of such a desperado, Raisuli is a gentleman. Still, I am glad to be back. And do you know what I propose to do now? Away off here I find in my declining years that the comforts that I need cannot be found. I do not know how soon I may be made the victim of another bandit who desires to use me as a means of redressing some fancied grievances. It may be even that Raisuli will return some time.

"So soon as I can straighten out my affairs I shall return to the land of the free, America. I have many friends there—dear friends, and the memory of them came back to me as I sat during the long nights gazing at the brilliant stars and wondering what those friends were doing in the far off New York.

"I shall return, probably never to leave America again. That is the one strong resolution I made while I sat in front of

THE NEW NATIONAL CHAIRMAN

GEORGE B. CORTELYOU
Greeting friends at Chicago.

GREAT OVATION FOR FAIRBANKS

Candidate Given a Warm Reception by His Neighbors.

MULTITUDE CHEERS

Appreciates Kindness of Home Folk More Than Convention Applaudits.

DEMOCRATS JOINED IN EVENT

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

INDIANAPOLIS, June 25.—"I appreciate your kindness and your interest in me more than the plaudits of my fellow countrymen at the Chicago convention," said Senator Fairbanks while in his happiest vein on being welcomed home by thousands of his fellow citizens here tonight. Rain interfered more or less with the celebration, a heavy downpour starting at 5 o'clock, which continued until after 6. After this the weather was threatening and probably kept many away who would otherwise have attended the welcoming reception.

The senator's speech was short, he having announced his intention, while on board the train from Chicago, to say little more than to thank most heartily his fellow Indianapolitans. Leaving Chicago at 1 o'clock this afternoon the special train carrying the vice presidential nominee made six stops before its arrival in Indianapolis at 7:15. Great throngs of the laboring men of the state greeted the distinguished Hoosier, since it is Saturday and the greater portion of them enjoy the half holiday.

On the vice presidential train accompanying the senator, were Mrs. Fairbanks, his son, Frederick Fairbanks; National Chairman George B. Cortelyou, Henry C. Payne, Joseph B. Keiling, Senator A. J. Beveridge, Col. and Mrs. Harry S. New, Mr. and Mrs. Warren Fairbanks and Daniel M. Ransdell. A five-minute stop was made at Fowler, 10 minutes at Lafayette, 10 minutes at Colfax, 10 minutes at Thorntown, 15 minutes at Lebanon and 5 minutes at Zanesville.

Cheering Multitudes.

At 7:15 p. m. the train reached the Union station, where it was met by the reception committee, headed by Congressman Jesse Overstreet, and representatives from the Commercial club, the board of trade, the Merchants' association, the Marion club, the Columbia club and the South Side Republican club. A brass band enlivened the air with welcoming music. The senator and wife and party were escorted to carriages and following the Indianapolis Military band, the procession moved north through a cheering multitude to the senator's home, in North Meridian street, where the reception by the citizens took place. The lawn was lighted up and the veranda used for the speakers' stand.

Mayor Holtzman welcomed the senator on behalf of the city. John L. Griffiths, the silver-tongued, welcomed him for the commercial interests of the city. Senator Beveridge congratulated him as a representative of the United States senate. Then Senator Fairbanks was given a chance to respond.

The outpouring reached many thousands. Numerous Democrats, closely allied with political strife, were present at the senator's reception, which was one of the greatest spontaneous outpourings of citizens ever known in the Hoosier capital.

Glories of Indiana.

Senator Fairbanks' response to the addresses of welcome was as follows:

Mayor Holtzman, Mr. Griffiths, Mr. Kern, my neighbors and friends: Your warm and enthusiastic welcome almost overwhelms me. I am too poor in words to express to you the gratitude I feel for this kindly greeting. It is immeasurable. I am not insensible to the high honor which the Republican national convention at Chicago has conferred upon me. But above and beyond that, I value the neighborly respect and friendly regard which I have so long enjoyed here and which you manifest so generously tonight.

This city is very dear to us all. We have for it a profound affection. Most of what we have been and what we are and what we expect to be is centered here. Its shame is our shame; its honor our glory.

Our city has contributed many who have taken conspicuous places in American history. We are the joint inheritors of the honor they have brought to it. There was Thomas A. Hendricks, chosen by the American people for the vice presidency; Joseph E. McDonald, an able United States senator, and William H. English, once a candidate for the second office in the gift of his countrymen, men of great ability and high purposes, and we honor their memories, irrespective of our political beliefs.

In the perilous hours of our country, Oliver P. Morton, the Cromwell of American politics, was a mighty tower of strength. Walter Q. Gresham rendered conspicuous military and civic service and left us a spotless name.

Proud of Citizenship.

In the silent city of the dead, yonder, Gen. Benjamin Harrison sleeps. He wrote a high record of intelligent, conservative, patriotic service to the republic. We are proud of our city and state, and beyond that we are proud of our citizenship. Here labor and capital, those two mighty forces in our upbuilding, find a fruitful field of employment and here their mutual rights are well respected.

We value and hold fast to those virtues of the fireside which are the real strength of the republic. Our people are characterized by plain living and high thinking.

My friends, we have much to be thankful for. About us are the ample rewards of honest industry and the rich fruits of peace. Let us seek to promote good laws, wise administration, and make ourselves secure in the enjoyment of that contentment which comes from the observance and orderly enforcement of the law.

Senator Fairbanks, at the close of his address, expressed a desire to meet as many as possible personally and shake hands with them. For an hour following the speeches people thronged past and shook hands with the senator and Mrs. Fairbanks, Chairman Cortelyou and Secretary Payne being introduced.

PITTSBURGH COUPLE LOSE CHILDREN IN FAIR CITY

K. McKee and Wife Wander About Streets Looking for Boarding House They Had Neglected to Take the Number Of

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 25.—All last night K. McKee and wife, visitors to the fair from Pittsburgh, Pa., wandered about the streets within a mile of Union station searching for a rooming house in which, yesterday, they had left their 6-year-old son and 8-year-old daughter. Unable to find the place they appealed today to the police at the four courts.

The parents failed to take the names of the people running the rooming house or the address, thinking they could easily find it, and started for the Union station to claim their luggage. As soon as they got it they started to look for the rooming house, only to discover that they were completely lost. It was then that they began going from house to house, making inquiries as to where their children were.

Policeman Fleater was detailed by Lieut. McKenna to assist the couple in finding the rooming house and the children. He had no clue except that "the place was lightly painted.' He searched for an hour and finally found a house, the keeper of which greeted him joyfully.

"I am glad you came," she said, "I was just going to look for a policeman. I've two children here who have been abandoned by their parents and I don't know what to do with them."

"Those are the children I'm looking for," said the policeman, and parents and children were united.

ARE DEAD, FIVE OVERCOME

High Temperature Increases the Season's Record to 13 Deaths and 10 Prostrations.

MAXIMUM WAS 87 DEGREES

Big Crowd Sweltered in Hot Dowtown Streets—Weather Man Promises Thunder Showers and Cooler Conditions for Pittsburgh Today.

Four deaths and five prostrations as a result of the heat occurred in this vicinity yesterday. The hot weather has caused so far this summer a total of 13 deaths and 10 prostrations in and about Pittsburgh. The highest point reached by the official mercury during the day was 87 degrees, which was two degrees lower than the maximum temperature on Friday. The humidity was 71 at 8 o'clock in the morning and 12 hours later it was only 1 per cent lower.

THE DEAD:

GLADYS BARRETT, aged 4 months, daughter of William Barrett, of 614 Washington avenue, Braddock, died of heat exhaustion.

ANNA DOBELINSKY, aged 6 months, daughter of John Dobelinsky of Franklin street, Braddock, died of heat exhaustion.

THE 6-MONTHS-OLD daughter of James Harkins of John street, Braddock, died of heat exhaustion.

LUCINDA JACKSON, 1-month-old daughter of William Jackson, 1202 Maple avenue, McKeesport, died from heat prostration.

THE PROSTRATED:

ANDREW SMISOR, a Slav, of Potterville, fell to the floor unconscious from heat at the Homestead Steel works and cut his head badly on a large cinder.

PATRICK ROBINSON, aged 30, overcome by heat at the Rankin plant of the American Steel and Wire Company.

JOHN HILL, aged 45, a stone mason, of 1312 Race street, Allegheny, prostrated at McClure avenue and Richardson street, Allegheny.

WILLIAM VANCE of Robinson street, Allegheny, overcome by heat in Twenty-second street while returning from work.

Humidity Was Distressing.

The humidity was unusually high in comparison with the temperature for the day and everybody sweltered. Linen collars withered before noon, and those who were fortunate enough to get a Saturday half-holiday sought cool spots as soon as relieved from work. In the mills, offices and stores the air was oppressive in many places, in spite of the cooling appliances.

While people hurried from the hot downtown streets in which the still air was overcharged by the heat rising from the asphalt streets and from the buildings, many others came to town, and in spite of the weather the usual big Saturday afternoon crowds paraded over the hot pavements. The shady side of the streets, especially in Fifth avenue, were so crowded that those who were bent on other missions than pleasure were forced to take to the street and dodge cars and wagons in order to make any kind of progress.

The parks in the cities and suburbs attracted many people during the afternoon, and like the crowds downtown, received a slight ducking when the thunder showers arrived after 2 o'clock.

Streets Preferable to Hot Rooms.

In the evening many returned to town and the streets were crowded with people till after midnight, as many preferred to remain on the streets rather than go home to hot rooms only to toss and roll in trying to induce sleep to come. The hot weather is said to be unusually severe this year on infants, causing considerable illness and in several cases deaths are declared to be directly due to the high temperature.

During Friday night the atmosphere cooled off somewhat from the high temperature reached during the previous afternoon, but the change was not sufficient to make sleeping pleasant. At 1 o'clock yesterday morning the mercury was 78 degrees. From that hour it sank gradually till 6 o'clock, when the sun's rays began to get in their work and the mercury started on its climb up the tube again. At 9 o'clock the temperature had reached 7[illegible], but during the next hour a heavy shower set in and the mercury dropped 5 degrees. It then started up at the rate of 4 degrees an hour till 80 was reached at noon, when a steady rise of slightly over 1 degree an hour began and continued till 4 p. m., when the maximum for the day was registered. From the latter hour till 10 o'clock last night the mercury had only fallen back to 80.

Prevented a Record-Breaker.

The thunderstorm and shower about the middle of the afternoon probably prevented the record of Friday being broken. The total rainfall during the day measured .03 of an inch.

Since the removal of the local weather office from the Federal building to the twenty-fourth floor of the Farmers Bank building, it has been ascertained that the temperatures as now taken simply register the heat of the sun's rays, while at the Federal building the mercury was influenced several degrees by the heat rising from the streets.

The following temperatures were reported by the local weather office yesterday:

1 a. m.	78	Noon	80
2 a. m.	77	1 p. m.	82
3 a. m.	76	2 p. m.	83
4 a. m.	75	3 p. m.	84
5 a. m.	75	4 p. m.	87
6 a. m.	75	5 p. m.	85
7 a. m.	78	6 p. m.	84
8 a. m.	74	7 p. m.	82
9 a. m.	77	8 p. m.	80
10 a. m.	72	9 p. m.	80
11 a. m.	76	10 p. m.	80

The Washington weather forecast for Pittsburgh and this vicinity is for thunder showers and cooler today and fair conditions for tomorrow.

POISON IN BROOK IMPERILS A CITY

ANSONIA, CONN., June 25.—That half the residents of this city are not suffering from poisoning from paris green is not the fault of a party of small boys who recently dumped several pounds of the poison into the brook which supplies the city with drinking water. State Police Officer Hull, who has been investigating, has obtained the names of nine boys who put the poison in the water. There was no intention on their part to poison anyone, but all will be arrested. So far as known no ill effects have come of their prank.

UNDERWRITERS LIKE THE PLANS

Two Days of Study Interest National Board in South Side Warehouses.

MORE CONTRACTS AWARDED

Crawford Paving Company to Put in Concrete Piling System and Thomas McNally to Do Excavating—Records for Speed Promised.

Contracts were let yesterday for the piling work and the excavations for the great series of warehouses to be erected on the South Side by the Pittsburgh Terminal Warehouse and Transfer Company. Before the contracts were let a two-day study of the plans had been made by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. The board gave the plans their entire approval and announced their intention of coming to Pittsburgh to see the ideally fireproof structure which is to be built.

George W. C. Johnston, secretary of the company, and Charles Bickel, the architect, have just returned from New York after their conference with the board. Mr. Prior, the expert consulting engineer of the board, after going over the plans said the warehouse scheme was the largest and finest proposition that had ever come before the board and the best fireproof building they had ever seen, complying with all the rules, even the regulations adopted since the Baltimore fire. With these provisions carried out, it is expected that the most favorable insurance rates will be secured.

The concrete piling contract has been awarded to the Cranford Paving Company of Washington, D. C., and a new record in speedy work is to be made by this concern. There will be about 5,000 to 6,000 of these piles. The pier work and the concrete walls are to be completed, under bond, in 75 days. This is the biggest foundation contract ever let in Pittsburgh and it is also the first system of concrete piling ever used here. The average pile will be 30 feet deep in the ground, but some will be sunk 40 feet.

To complete this task in the required time the paving company has started for Pittsburgh its entire equipment from Washington, Philadelphia and New York, and on Monday will begin the work.

The excavation contract was awarded to Thomas McNally of Pittsburgh and his steam shovels are now on the ground. The excavation will be rushed so that it will keep ahead of the piling. As already announced, the structural steel will be made by the Jones & Laughlin Steel Company and the work of erection will be done by the Oscar Daniels Company of Chicago.

The proposed warehouses have the advantage of a location near the downtown section and in addition are reached by all the railroad lines, the Pennsylvania, Lake Erie, Wabash and, indirectly, by the Baltimore & Ohio.

VAN RENSSELAER NOT ELIGIBLE AS ELECTOR

State Leaders Carefully Looking Over Pennsylvania's List to Conform With Law.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

PHILADELPHIA, June 25.—Among those men who, because of their connection with national banks, will have to resign their places on the Republican presidential electoral ticket of this state is Alexander Van Rensselaer, the financier and clubman.

Mr. Van Rensselaer, like half a dozen more electors, who were nominated by the state convention, will not be competent to serve in the electoral capacity because of the law which provides that no officer of the government or official of a national bank shall be a member of the college.

Leaders of the party are going over the list of electors in a careful effort to find anything in their positions which might invalidate any of Pennsylvania's votes in the college. It is likely that the Democratic leaders will do likewise.

Senator Penrose and W. R. Andrews, secretary of the state committee, will return from Chicago tomorrow. The senator will take a long rest before he opens the state headquarters. The national campaign will be inaugurated in this city in the early fall with a big mass meeting in the Academy of Music, when the new senator, Mr. Knox, will make his first bow to the public in his new role, and when it is expected several figures of national importance will make speeches.

CHURCH UNABLE TO PAY PASTOR AND DISSOLVED

IRWIN, PA., June 25.—(Special.)—Members of the negro Baptist church were disappointed today after the arrival of ministers, who came to ordain the Rev. Septimus Brittain as pastor. The congregation was recently organized, Brittain was called and held services last Sunday. Ordination was fixed for today and when the elders and preachers arrived they only found a handful of people in the hall, but learned that this was the entire congregation. The leaders were convinced that the members could not support a pastor at $10 a week and after a conference a congregation decided to dissolve. Brittain says he was misled.

Lowry of this place, charging them with depositing quicklime in Blairs creek with intent to kill fish in the stream. The offense is punishable by $100 fine and six months in jail. The accused gave bail for a hearing.

Gaetamo Vital. They pleaded guilty, but sentence was suspended. Vital is an ex-Catholic priest whose work here is stirring bitter opposition.

the tent that Raisuli provided for me, away up there in the mountains.

"The story of my captivity? At, it is graven on my memory like a long, vivid dream. You remember the circumstances of my capture? It was like a bolt from the blue sky. Varley and I were in my drawing room, we heard a disturbance in the yard, ran out to ascertain the cause, and were confronted by a dozen of this fellow Raisuli's followers, who aimed their long rifles at us, and a few minutes later had us bound and ready to depart.

"'I am the Raisuli,' cried a powerful voice, 'I swear by all that is sacred that not a hair of your head shall be harmed unless you attempt to escape. Come peacefully with me and in a short time you shall be back safely among your own people.'

"'I believe you, Raisuli,' I replied. 'But at least let us send for our heavy coats and boots. We cannot go with you in evening dress and pumps.'

"He permitted a servant to go for our heavy clothing, and then began that frightful march. Soon we were hurrying along a path leading away from Tangier. We went over rocks, through bushes and trees, across roaring fords and down a steep slope toward the plains of Bubana.

"Not a word was spoken. The night was cold and a brilliant moon lighted up the landscape for miles around. No halts were made. Always advancing, we moved along at a trot, each man bundled up in his heavy cloak, Raisuli stately, stern, taciturn, stalking ahead and in the rear six of his followers, with their rifles resting across their saddles, silent but alert.

"'Where are we going?' I demanded.

"'Patience,' repeated the bandit, and then the silence once more.

In a Desolate Region.

"We entered through deep ravines, ascended and descended narrow defiles, and the mountains began to rise about us on all sides. A more wild and desolate region I have never imagined. There was the silence of the tomb all around us, and we never halted even for food or drink.

"For 24 hours we traveled thus. The afternoon following our departure, as we were leaving a narrow defile, my stirrup strap broke and, completely exhausted, I fell from my horse, sustaining a painful injury to my hip. It was Raisuli who gave the command to halt, and it was Raisuli himself who dismounted and courteously, tenderly assisted me to remount.

"'I regret that your excellency should have fallen,' he said differentially, but with the utmost dignity and gravity.

"Soon we were on our way once more, up, up, through narrow defiles and along ledges over which we could look into frightful chasms apparently thousands of feet deep, in which the vision lost itself in a mass of foliage that hid the road along which we were advancing.

"In many places the road was so hidden that riders had to go ahead and open the way through the brushwood which closed and absolutely obscured our advance as we passed through, and then descended once more into a cavern-like opening in the mountain. It was there that we halted. Our long journey was at an end. Again, with deference, Raisuli advanced, and with a deprecatory wave of the hand, introduced us into a dismal house that was absolutely bare of furnishings.

Captives Made Comfortable.

"The outlook was dark and I began to fear that we had been brought there to starve, at least. A frugal meal was furnished to us and with a guard before our door we thus spent our first night at the headquarters of the bandit chief. A better fate was in store for us, however. The next morning Raisuli appeared. 'Are we to know the fate that is in store for us?' I asked.

"'It is for your friends to decide,' he replied. 'My dear friend shall receive nothing but good treatment from Raisuli unless your friends below decide otherwise. Wait. You are safe here. Raisuli himself pledges his word to that.'

"That was all. Later we were informed of the terms that had been proposed for our ransom. My injured hip troubled me not a little, but I was soon able to limp around, and I found that we were treated with every kindness and consideration. My only concern was for my wife, and had it not been for that, and the realization that I was being detained against my will, I would have enjoyed the experience as a capital outing in the mountains.

"On the third day of our captivity we were provided with a comfortable tent, and there every night Raisuli and his men dined with us, in solemn dignity and state. There were about 12 of the men, I think, and every one was interesting as a type. Raisuli's word was law. He conversed with me freely, outlining the indignities to which he claimed he had been subjected by the Moroccan government, and regretting the necessity which had compelled him to adopt such unusual measures to secure their redress.

Bandit Interested in America.

"Frequently he would stalk up to my tent in the dead of night while I sat outside silently watching the stars and listening to the strange night noises that floated up out of the dark abyss below. We were directly in the heart of the mountains. Tall peaks rose all about us and dense forests rose everywhere except in the small space which had been cleared for the camp where we rested. I shall never forget the strange conversations I had there with Raisuli, with the moon glimmering down upon us and the tall-bearded figure of the bandit, now sitting up as straight as one of the tall peaks, and again bending forward, intently as I told him of the greatness of the American nation, of the wonders of New York and of the power which was behind the nation that I called my own.

"He was particularly interested in my stories of the great ships of war and the thousands of soldiers at the command of the chief of the Americans, and frequently after I had talked to him for an hour about the land across the sea, he would stalk away, and pace back and forth near the brink of the chasm, his head bowed low, deep in inutterable thoughts.

"Day followed day and night followed night in this way. Twice he went away, leaving a strong guard to look after us and giving orders in a fierce, strange tongue when he departed. A week ago he returned from the last trip. That night he told me that I might hope for freedom.

Promise of Freedom.

"'Your friends have promised,' he said. 'I could get nothing more out of him. But once more he turned the conversation on America.

"'I am glad you are an American,' he said at length. But neither could I get any explanation from him on this point.

"All during our captivity he was scrupulously attentive in the matter of our meals. The food was fair, consisting of game, fruits and the like, but we irked dreadfully under our restraint. Finally, yesterday morning, he came to my tent and said:

"'Your friends have proven true. You may return to them.'

"Once more we were taken over that frightful ride, down ravines and up over steep defiles. We journeyed about 20 hours, and then suddenly the column halted. Raisuli urged his horse to my side and extended his hand. I couldn't resist taking it.

"'Ride on,' he said, pointing directly ahead.

"The next minute, with their chief at their head, the bandits turned suddenly and darted back over the road along which we had advanced. The last I saw of him was when he turned a sharp ledge of rock and disappeared at a gallop."

COLD STORAGE MEATS UNDER GOVERNMENT TEST

It Is Claimed That Chickens Are Kept Five Years, Then Marketed.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The chemists of the agricultural department have taken up the hygienic problems connected with commercial cold storage. Data has been gathered showing the extent to which meats, eggs and fruits are placed in storage houses and held for better prices. It has been found that in Washington it is the practice of dealers, commission men and speculators to hold meats and poultry indefinitely for suitable prices. In some cases poultry was held several months and then put on the market.

A large business is done in what are known as "soupers," consisting of poor and unsalable sheep and fowl that are held and sold to restaurants for soup stock. Dr. Wylie, who is in charge of the experiments, declares that meat and poultry as kept under prevailing commercial practices is not wholesome food. The processes, he says, in some respects are defective, the care and handling are reprehensible, and the goods are liable to be placed on sale and, if unsold, put back in storage, with the result that flavor and substance are seriously injured.

The experiments will include a trial of such meats, and chemical analysis will be relied on to determine precisely their condition and suitability as food. Dr. Wylie says that chickens may be kept a year and be fit for food, but keeping them five years, as it is claimed has been done, he pronounces out of the question. The experiments will include an inquiry into the character of stored eggs and fruits.

ROBINSTEENS SUED AGAIN.

Receiver of Steel Company Charges Them and Attorney Stevenson With Conspiracy.

Another chapter in the suits of George E. Guyer, receiver of the Eleanor Iron and Steel Company, against the Robinsteens, who were at the head of the company until the receiver was appointed, was taken yesterday, when an information charging conspiracy was made before Alderman J. V. McMasters against Attorney Alexander K. Stevenson, John Robinstean and George Robinsteen.

The charges are similar to the others made against the Robinsteens and Mrs. John Robinsteen. They enumerate that machinery and mill supplies valued at $2,086.79 was bought by the Robinsteens as majority directors from Attorney Stevenson for $33,800 in November, 1901. Capital stock was issued, it is said, in payment for this machinery. It is alleged that Attorney Stevenson never owned the machinery, but that it was bought from Wilkes Bros. and paid for by the Eleanor Iron and Steel Company.

The defendants waived a hearing and furnished $1,000 bail for court. Attorney Stevenson said last night that there is nothing in the charges. He says he has $8,000 invested in the company and has no other connection with it.

FOUR VIOLENT DEATHS.

Coroner of Washington County Has Busy Day—Ten Deaths by Drowning.

WASHINGTON, PA., June 25.—(Special.)—Four violent deaths in Washington county have been reported to the coroner in less than 24 hours. One of these was due to a peculiar accident. Charles Reynolds, aged 13, of Canonsburg while riding a bicycle ran into a buggy. The shaft pierced his chest above his heart. Charles Jobes, aged 11, was drowned in the Monongahela river at Coal Center.

He was seated with some companions on a log which was turned over, throwing him into the water. He was unable to swim. An unknown man was found dead in the reservoir near Ellsworth today. The body had evidently been in the water several days. Stephen Bolack, a slav, was killed by a fall of slate at Vesta mine No. 4, near California. His body was crushed beyond recognition.

KILLED ON EXCURSION WHICH HE MANAGED

DOYLESTOWN, PA., June 25.—(Special.)—William C. Deford, aged 25, of Philadelphia, was instantly killed at Forest park, Chalfont, today by being run over by a train. Mr. Deford was one of the committee having in charge the excursion of the J. B. Stetson hatters' union and the Berks street Y. M. C. A., which took over 2,000 excursionists to the park. He was on the first train of three sections, and upon arriving opposite the park entrance, without waiting for the train to stop, he attempted to jump off the car and was thrown under the wheels, half a dozen cars passing over his body.

Moore, formerly of Beaver. Sebring is but 28 years of age. His salary will be $2,500, with fees, which will bring it up to $4,000 a year. Against Sunday Desecration.

The crusade against Sunday trading in Wilkinsburg will be revived today, when sermons and a number of pulpits references will be heard against desecration. Burgess Keys said that so far he had not taken the matter up but anticipated an early movement towards enforcing the law.

VETERANS' DEATH RATE IS RAPIDLY INCREASING

Comparatively Few Applications for Pensions Under the New Order.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—According to figures just completed at the pension office, the "unknown army" of old soldiers not heretofore drawing pensions but eligible under President Roosevelt's new order is far smaller than has been supposed. It is thought it may not exceed 25,000 men.

Though the new law has been in effect for nearly three months, and the pension office authorities have been endeavoring to have this class of veterans apply for the pensions due them, less than 5,000 applications have been filed.

It was estimated by members of congress and the pension officers that there were at least 150,000 of the former members of the armies of the civil war who were unaccounted for on the rolls. Now, however, the estimate has been revised, and it was said today that there are not more than 20,000 soldiers alive who are not pensioners.

The small number of applications indicates, the officers of the bureau say, that the death rate has been much higher of late years among the veterans than has been supposed.

MUST WEAR CLOTHES.

Filipinos at St. Louis Compelled to Don at Least a Pair of Trunks.

CLEVELAND, June 25.—Concerning the order that the members of the Negrito and Igorotte tribes at the Filipino exhibit at St. Louis should wear more clothes, Col. Clarence Edwards said tonight that the order was not the result of any complaint of insufficient clothing, but simply to eliminate a feature of that exhibit that had been exploited too greatly. It forms a small portion of the exhibit, Col. Edwards said, and had been made the greater feature.

Hereafter no person in those tribes shall be permitted to go about without at least a pair of trunks on their body. Heretofore the children have gone naked. The matter of the dress of the members of those tribes had been discussed with prominent men and women and there had been no suggestion or complaint from them.

JUMPED IN A PANIC.

Street Car Stalled at Crossing in Front of Heavy Freight Train.

Nearly 70 passengers on a street car at the Eighth street and Halket avenue crossing of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad at Braddock had a narrow escape from death yesterday morning. The motorman made the safety stop when a freight train was two blocks away. The car was fairly on the tracks when the trolley flew off.

The passengers saw the train and were in a panic. Those who could jumped off the car. For a few seconds the trolley see-sawed past the trolley wire and then swung into place. The motorman threw the controller lever clear around and the car fairly leaped across the track with the train not 20 yards away.

GROANS FOR SCALE.

Miners in Alabama Convention Don't Take Kindly to the Wage Cut.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., June 25.—The sub-committee appointed by the convention of the United Mine Workers of America and the Furnace Operators' association, to consider the question of a new miners' wage contract to take effect July 1, were in conference today.

The operators' proposition on a wage scale was submitted to the miners' convention this afternoon by the sub-committee of the miners. It provides for a reduction of the maximum wage from 67½ cents to 55 cents per ton and the minimum from 47½ to 40 cents per ton. It was greeted with groans on the part of the convention and was referred back to the sub-committee for further conference with the operators. The miners' convention then adjourned until Wednesday.

MOVING VAN CARRIED PARTY.

Oakland Onia Indians Tender Surprise in Conventional Style.

Perched about in a huge moving van, which carried a commissary equipment sufficient to hold Port Arthur for several weeks, 30 members of the former famous Oakland Onia Indians took possession of the residence of A. M. Swyres, 3292 Boquet street, Friday night, and tendered him a startling surprise on the occasion of his birthday. The party, among whom were many prominent business and professional men, was sub-divided into committees of cooks, dishwashers and household mechanics.

A euchre followed, during which handsome favors were distributed, while the enforced host was the recipient of attractive remembrances.

New Bridge Is Sold.

NEW BRIGHTON, PA., June 25.—(Special.)—The overgrade bridge, a new steel structure between New Brighton and Beaver Falls, was sold today to W. R. Wright and others of the Philadelphia syndicate owning the Beaver Valley Traction Company, whose cars cross the bridge. The consideration was $75,000.

Mildred Muchrow No Longer Likes Morphine

Mildred Muchrow, aged 18, of Penn avenue, Turtle Creek, ceased yesterday to be a believer in the advantage of using morphine for toothache. Miss Mildred had a painful attack and tried the drug with such effect that toothache was soon the least of her troubles. Dr. W. L. Hunter was called. She is expected to recover.

THOUSANDS WANT WORK ON CANAL

Panama Commission Is Deluged With Applications for Employment.

PLANS ARE GOING FORWARD

Butchers, Bakers and Scientific Men of All Descriptions Are Asking for Positions—The Judiciary Is to Be Non-Partisan.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—The busiest place in Washington is the headquarters of the Panama canal commission, where the business of building the great ditch is being planned and systematized. Only Admiral Walker, the chairman of the commission, is in the city. The other commissioners are scattered about the country and are expected to meet in Panama about August 1. Col. Gorgas, surgeon in charge of the sanitary work on the isthmus, which will be one of the most vital problems, sailed from New York this week with a corps of assistants, as also did John F. Wallace, the chief civil engineer, with a party of engineers.

Secretary Murphy, who will remain at the headquarters in Washington, has found as much as he ever had to do in a busy life. He has to deal with the thousands of applicants for positions. People are asking for every imaginable kind of employment, from butchers and bakers to the highest of scientific positions. Not less than 6,000 applications have already been filed.

When the commissioners return from the isthmus, which will be some time in September, it is expected a more definite plan of organization will be attempted.

Three judges are to be appointed for the judiciary of the government of the canal zone. It is the understanding that two of them will be appointed from the Republican and one from the Democratic party. President Roosevelt is said to be practically decided upon the appointment of one of the judges, and that one happens to be an Alabama Democrat. Representative Richardson of the Eighth Alabama district was in Washington several weeks ago and urged for the place Osceola Kyle of his district, who has been serving on the circuit bench by appointment from the governor. Judge Kyle's name has been so strongly brought to the attention of the president that he is said to be inclined to appoint him.

LOST BOY FOUND IN JAIL.

George Turley, Aged 11, Had Been a Runnaway for 10 Months.

The 11-year-old son of George Turley, Sr., of New Castle, disappeared from his home 10 months ago, and last night he was found by his father in the Allegheny county jail under the name of John Jones. The parent said he had spent considerable money in trying to locate the boy and finally gave up the task, thinking that he was dead.

The boy was arrested June 21 on the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie railroad as a runaway. Magistrate Vitchestain committed him to jail to await the action of the juvenile court. While in jail he became confidential with Warden Edward Lewis and revealed his identity. The boy said he had been following circuses and living on the best he could. The boy will be released this morning and taken to his home.

Heavy Losses by Incendiary.

CLEVELAND, O., June 25.—Fire, supposed to be of incendiary origin, today caused losses aggregating $300,000 in the lumber district lying along the river front. Several acres covered with big lumber piles were swept clean by the flames. The fire broke out in the factory of J. N. Hahn & Co., and, fanned by a stiff breeze, rapidly spread to the lumber yards of the Nicola, Stone & Meyers Company and the Guy & Ralph Gray Company.

Young Man Confesses Robbery.

YORK, PA., June 25.—(Special.)—John G. Sell, a young society man of this city and a member of the fire insurance firm of King & Sell, made a startling confession here today in which he told how, on June 9, he entered the office of Ramsay & Small, in the Small mercantile building, rifled the safe, securing $34 belonging to the treasurer of the Penn Park baseball team, and attempted to set fire to the building.

C. E. Mercer, agent for the Swift & Co. packing house of the South Side, reported to the police last night that he had lost his watch at South Twenty-second and Carson streets. He was in a crowd at that place, and could not tell whether it had been stolen or not.

Bids for Arsenal Hospital.

Bids for the improvement of the hospital at the Allegheny arsenal in Butler street were opened yesterday by Lieut. Ralph W. Drury. The two lowest bids were recommended and sent to the quartermaster general at Washington. The contract is only a matter of about $1,000.

Twenty-Five Negroes Arrested.

Lieut. Meyers with a squad of policemen made a raid on the negro corner loungers, who infest that portion of Wylie avenue between Washington and Fulton streets, last night. Within half an hour 25 negroes were arrested.

Crap Game Broken Up.

Policemen last night raided a crap game in a vacant lot on Smallman street, near Thirty-fifth street, and arrested eight negroes.

PORT ARTHUR FLEET CRIPPLED

Japanese ships sustained little damage.

The torpedo boat destroyer Shirakumo was hit by a shell, which fell in the cabin and which had three men killed and three others wounded. The Chidori, a vessel of the same class, was hit behind the engine room, but no casualties resulted therefrom. Torpedo boats 64 and 66 were slightly damaged.

Situation in Manchuria.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 25.—The general staff has received the following dispatch from Lieut.-Gen. Sakharoff, under date of June 25:

"Since the morning of June 23 the enemy has continued to advance toward Kai-Chau. Three detachments of cavalry, each consisting of four or five squadrons, led and were followed by dense lines of infantry, behind which are marching columns of the line. The Japanese outposts toward evening extended along the Kho valley, about nine miles south of Senuchen, with the cavalry posted in the rear. The infantry with machine guns held the village of Mo-Tsia-Tung on the right flank. There were firing all day long. We had one man wounded.

"The frontier guards under Sub-Lieut. Demeyer ambuscaded and fired on a squadron of Japanese cavalry, which lost considerably, ten of their horses being killed.

"There had been no further advance from the enemy toward Kai-Chau up to 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon since June 21, when a movement of the Japanese was observed from Khanza, on the southern Siuyen road toward Kai-Chau along the mountainous route from Khanza leading northward to Siakhotung.

Driven from Sian Diao.

"The Japanese, on June 22, occupied the village of Sian Diao, but toward evening evacuated the place under pressure by a detachment of our vanguard.

"The enemy concentrated three battalions, with six guns and four squadrons of cavalry, at Matsiavaitse, and at dawn of June 23 a detachment consisting of a battalion of infantry, two guns and two squadrons of cavalry suddenly attacked a company of our vanguards bivouacking at Sian-Diao and forced the company to retire. The Japanese occupied Black mountain, north of Sian-Diao, and also the pass east of Sian-Diao on the Siakhotung road.

"The Russians concentrated on the heights near Siak-Ho-Tung. Four companies with three mountain guns were ordered to move from Siak-Ho-Tung over the pass to Sian-Diao. The Japanese were dislodged from their position by our artillery, and our detachment, reinforced, proceeded at 11 o'clock in the morning to attack the whole of the enemy's front. The enemy fell back in utter disorder, and Sian-Diao was reoccupied at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. Our artillery fire forced back the Japanese, who retired precipitately beyond Eritakau.

Artillery Did Good Work.

"Our losses were seven soldiers killed, three officers and 14 soldiers wounded and one man missing. The officer commanding the detachment speaks highly of the behavior of our artillery.

"Some Cossacks on June 23 prepared an ambuscade at Linisiakhe, about four miles from Sei-Tu-Chang. A Japanese detachment fell into the ambuscade and lost 15 killed or wounded. Sub-Lieut. Polosoff of the Russian force was wounded.

"At 11 o'clock in the morning of June 22 a Russian detachment reconnoitering three miles to the westward of Afyangmen exchanged shots with the enemy's vanguard. At about noon the Russians advanced and attacked the Japanese on the right flank, dislodging them from several advanced fortified positions.

"A Russian detachment at 5 o'clock in the afternoon approached the enemy's main position and found it occupied by three regiments of infantry with 18 guns. The Russians held their position until 9 o'clock, not attacking the Japanese because of the latter's superior force and not being attacked. The men retired in perfect order toward Saimatsze after a little delay. Our losses are not yet known.

"The town of Kwainsen has been evacuated by the enemy."

Army Officer Sues for Divorce.

WOOSTER, O., June 25.—(Special.)—Two weeks ago Maj. Elmer T. Taggart of the Sixth United States infantry filed a petition praying for divorce from Grace Viola Cuthbert Taggart, who, prior to her marriage, was a society belle of Chicago. Taggart charges gross neglect of duty and alleged improper conduct with other men. Mrs. Taggart, who resides in San Francisco, hastened across the country on learning the nature of the charges and this afternoon filed her answer. She denies all his allegations. She charges cruelty and gross neglect.

DETERMINED MEN SEARCHED.

Crowds Tramped the Fields Looking for Assailant of 5-Year-Girl.

Several crowds of determined men searched until a late hour last evening through the fields about Rankin for the assailant of a 5-year-old daughter of Mrs. Margaret Masters, a widow of Baltimore street, Rankin.

A crowd of boys found the girl in a serious condition about 9 o'clock lying in a secluded spot in the open country back of the town. A physician was summoned, but it was thought last night that she could not recover.

The police of Rankin started to search immediately but had only a faint hope of success because of the meagre description received. The child's father died two months ago.

HAYS WILL KILL FIREMEN'S BILL

Declares Fire Fighters Have Another Scheme If They Get Vacations.

NEW MEASURE TO BE SHELVED

Mayor Says Employes Want to Work on Twelve-Hour Shifts—Councils Will Adjourn Before They Can Act on the Resolution.

Mayor Hays is determined that no bill shall be passed by councils to give the firemen a vacation, notwithstanding his expressed approval of the second resolution introduced in councils last Thursday night. The first resolution was vetoed by the mayor on the ground that it had been put through councils in an illegal manner. His objections were that the bill had not been printed and referred to a committee. The second resolution was introduced to remove the objections made by the mayor to the first bill. It was referred to the public safety committee, but the mayor has decreed it shall not become law. He practically said so yesterday.

A call was issued yesterday for a meeting of the public safety committee on next Wednesday afternoon to consider the firemen's bill. It is significant that the committee will meet on the same day that councils will meet, and, therefore, there will not be time, even should the resolution be approved by the committee, for it to be printed for the use of councils. The meeting of councils on Wednesday will be the last regular meeting until September, and there is no chance of the firemen getting a vacation this summer. That the mayor is antagonistic to the firemen was evidenced by his talk yesterday.

"The firemen are going about the matter in the right way now, and Director Moore and myself will meet with the committee next Wednesday to talk the matter over. There is no money to employ substitutes while the firemen are on their vacations, and it is up to the committee and councils to decide whether they want to run the fire companies short-handed," said the mayor.

"I know one thing," added the mayor, "and that is, if this move for vacations is successful, it will be followed by another move to put all the firemen on 12-hour shifts, instead of keeping them on the whole 24 hours, as at present. This will make a double force necessary. If you ask any of the chiefs or captains, they will tell you that this will be the next move," declared the mayor.

Despite the mayor's assertion that there is not enough money in the fire appropriation to employ substitutes while the regular firemen are on vacation, a resolution has been introduced in councils to transfer $15,000 from the fire appropriation to pay the expenses of holding the bond election on July 12. This amount would be sufficient to employ substitutes.

TIN PLATE CONFERENCE MAKES NO SETTLEMENT

Both Sides Determined Not to Yield in the Matter of Wages.

Contrary to all expectations, the joint conference of the Amalgamated association and the American Sheet and Tin Plate Company did not terminate yesterday. The meeting was adjourned until tomorrow morning, when the wage scale will again be considered. It is expected a settlement will be reached by noon, as it has been arranged to hold a joint conference between the association and the Independent Sheet Mill Operators' association at the Lincoln, in the afternoon.

The sheet mill conference was to have begun tomorrow morning but was postponed on account of the failure to end the tin plate conference. If the tin plate conference does not reach an agreement by noon it will be adjourned until after the sheet mill conference is ended.

The Amalgamated association officials place no credence in the published report that several lodges intend to secede from the organization. The report stated that the lodges in Newport, Covington, Ashland, Ky., and Middletown, O., held a meeting to form a new association. James Ross, a member of the Newport lodge, is in Pittsburgh attending the tin plate conference, and he claims the report is absurd.

"The Newport lodge elected me delegate to the conference, and if the members had any intention of breaking away from the parent organization they would not have sent me here," said Mr. Ross.

NIGHT SCHOOL WITH VERY UNIQUE STUDENTS

They Labor by Day and Some Are Married, but They Continue to Study.

About 60 students and professors were present at the class night exercises of the Casino Technical Night school in East Pittsburgh on the evening of June 17. The meeting was held in the Casino hall and most of those present were employes of the Westinghouse interests.

Prof. O. L. Bear of the Westinghouse Machine Company, presided and acted as toastmaster. Among those who made speeches were L. O. Packer, president of the school and instructor in mathematics; C. F. Dooly of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company; J. M. Bowers, class president, sophomore; B. Hines, secretary; R. S. Ryland, R. C. Redbend, class president, freshmen; E. P. Doyle, W. T. Cocker, J. C. Henderson, C. E. Harris, P. R. Daniels, J. C. Callander, G. C. Maus and C. E. Homer.

There was a good deal of music, both vocal and instrumental, and the president handed the students their examination grades for the past term. Most of the students labor all day and have domestic or other duties, and it was considered satisfactory by the faculty that not a student failed in all his examinations and but few in one. The course is an engineering one.

MANY FINE DWELLINGS.

Maple Grove, the New Residence Section of Sewickley Soon to be Graced by a Number of Fine Houses.

THEIR PRICES WILL RANGE FROM FOUR TO TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS, AND THEY WILL BE OF THE MOST MODERN DESIGN.

The recent fine weather has had its effect upon the new residence district of Sewickley-Maple Grove. The new dwellings in prospect will occupy some of the most desirable parts of this section of the fashionable colony. The plans include houses from four thousand (the restricted price) dollars to ten thousand, all of them brick and of the most modern design. Maple avenue, the main thoroughfare of the plan, will be graced by most of them. The building line has been established at twenty-five feet back from the property line on all the lots, which will insure uniform lawns and leave enough room for shade trees and flower beds for those who wish the latter to decorate their grounds. Several of the deeds for lots here include groups of from two to ten. Already water and gas mains have been laid, and the sewerage system has been completed. The level condition of all this plan makes it a place easily laid out and beautified. The sandy nature of the soil makes the natural drainage perfect, for hardly has a rainstorm ceased until the ground assumes a firm condition, the water running right off, leaving good roadways. Really Maple Grove is an ideal combination of city advantages and country benefits—and when it is considered that this is only 18 minutes' ride from the busiest manufacturing city in the world the desirability of the property is readily recognized.

ELECTRICAL DISPLAY AT FILIPINO BANQUET

Council Committee Makes Last Arrangements for Entertainment of Orientals.

Everything is in readiness for the entertainment of the Filipino commissioners on Monday and Tuesday. The council committee met yesterday afternoon and made final arrangements. All the subcommittees announced their work completed. The sub-committee on itinerary stated that the excursion for tomorrow had been cut short by the elimination of the Bessemer rail mill at Braddock, which will bring the visitors back to the Hotel Schenley at 4:20 o'clock, instead of 5:30, as originally planned.

In the evening there will be 375 guests at the banquet. The electric decorations will be a feature. On one side of the hall above the table where the Filipino guests will sit, will be the word "America" in large electric letters. On the opposite wall will be the American flag in electric lights. The commissioners will sit at an E-shaped table, and both this table and the speakers' table will be decorated with red, white and blue electric lights.

The program for the banquet is as follows: Invocation, the Rev. F. M. Sneed; toastmaster, Judge Joseph Buffington; address of welcome, City Solicitor William B. Rodgers; response, Senor Juan Sumulung, member of the Filipino commission; address, "Pittsburgh," Congressman James W. Brown.

The address of Senor Sumulung will be delivered in Spanish and will be translated by Major Ferguson, who acts as interpreter for the commissioners.

Select Councilman Charles H. West, chairman of the committee on entertainment, and President Wightman of select council, left last night for Buffalo to meet the commissioners and escort them to Pittsburgh. They will arrive tomorrow morning at 7:30 o'clock.

Found Strange Man in Room.

Mrs. I. Rosenberg, of No. 1418 Penn avenue, awoke yesterday morning to discover a man standing in her room. Her calls for help were followed by the man jumping from the window to an alley a few feet below. Policeman Thomas Nevin caught Gustaine Khamski, no home, who was running from the scene. He was sentenced to 30 days in the workhouse. It is said that there were $3,000 worth of diamonds in Mrs. Rosenberg's room.

HOSPITAL ACTS UNFAIRLY

Grand Army Men Renew Attack on West Penn's Treatment of Veterans.

THE SUPERINTENDENT EXPLAINS

Case of Thomas R. Boss, Who Is Alleged to Have Been Placed Among Paupers, Causes Lively Meeting of the County Association.

A sharp attack on the alleged mistreatment of old soldiers sent to the West Penn hospital was made at a meeting of the Allegheny County Grand Army association yesterday afternoon at Post 3 hall, Fifth avenue. The criticisms were answered by Dr. J. C. Kennedy during the discussion, but the feeling of the members of the association present was such that a resolution was adopted instructing the association's hospital committee to confer with the management, demanding better treatment and to take the case into court for final settlement if the hospital authorities did not accede to the demands.

The trouble has been in existence for several years and arises from the fact that the sanitary commission gave the hospital about $150,000 for the purpose of guaranteeing medical and surgical treatment to veterans of the Western Pennsylvania regiments.

Yesterday's discussion was started by T. G. Jones of Post 236, who reported that Thomas B. Boss, past commander of that post, had been sent to the hospital for treatment, where, according to Jones, he was placed among the paupers, many of them foreigners. He left the second day. Jones said the gift did not contemplate the old soldiers being treated like paupers. Dr. Kennedy stated that the veterans sent to the hospital are given the same treatment as pay patients, except that they are placed in the general ward instead of private rooms. Frank D. Blair stated he thought the old soldiers should be treated better than at present and said he had gone into court some years ago and secured a mandamus forcing the authorities to admit a patient they had spurned away. Thomas G. Sample said he thought the matter should be settled, and H. H. Bengough presented the resolution.

Superintendent Charles S. Howell of the West Penn hospital stated last evening that the case of Boss was one where the rules had been infringed upon to do an old soldier a favor; that the hospital in no case objected to an old soldier, but that it is not allowed by its charter to admit incurable or contagious disease. Boss, he said, is afflicted with paralysis.

The agreement with the sanitary commission covering the admission of old soldiers to the West Penn follows:

"Union soldiers of the volunteer regiments of Western Pennsylvania will be admitted to the medical and surgical departments of the Western Pennsylvania hospital upon the recommendation of any post commander of the Grand Army of the Republic or colonel commander of the Union Veteran Legion, provided that such applicant shall come within the regulations of such hospital and shall be found to require medical or surgical treatment or care, upon examination by any of our medical or surgical staff."

It is claimed that this does not entitle the old soldiers to treatment in private rooms, the change which was demanded by the meeting yesterday.

GOING TO ST. LOUIS.

Pennsylvania Delegates to Start to the Democratic Convention Saturday.

Arrangements have been completed for the trip of the Pennsylvania delegates to the Democratic convention at St. Louis. The party will leave Philadelphia at 12:20 o'clock Saturday afternoon and leave here at 9:10 p. m. Stops will be made at Harrisburg and Altoona. The delegates from Pittsburgh and Western Pennsylvania will board the train here.

The train will be composed of nine Pullman cars, a dining car and a combination baggage and commissary car. The delegates will arrive in St. Louis at 1:45 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The Pennsylvania caucus will be held July 5. There will be a meeting of the local delegates at Col. Guffey's office on Tuesday afternoon. P. Gray Meeks, secretary of the Democratic state committee, was here yesterday to discuss the details of the trip with Col. Guffey.

W. J. Brennen said yesterday that the Pennsylvania delegates would not decide what they would do until they reached St. Louis. He thinks that an eastern man will be named and believes that it will not be Cleveland. He figures Judge Parker's present strength at 420 delegates and it requires 682 to nominate. He says that he does not see any dark horse.

His brother went to his assistance, and when he touched Benjamin's body he was precipitated head first to the ground. He survived but a short time. Benjamin was dead when taken from the tree.

REGISTERS NOT OVERWORKED NOW

Patronage of the Street Car Lines Has Decreased Markedly.

DUE TO BUSINESS CHANGE

General Slowness of the Iron and Steel Industry Responsible in the Main for the Falling Off in the Number of Passengers Carried.

Nearly everyone who rides in Pittsburgh street cars has noticed in the last few months a marked decrease in the number of passengers on these lines. It was for several years past an unusual matter to be able to secure a seat in a car leaving the center of the city from 4:30 to 7 p. m., or in-bound from 7 to 9 a. m. Nowadays it is the exception on some lines to find a crowd large enough to prevent all from obtaining a seat.

The cause is not that the cars are more numerous or that a more efficient service is being given, but simply that the patronage is smaller. The business has fallen off to an unusual extent and the cause of this goes back to the general depression in the iron and steel industry in particular.

"Prince or pauper" is the name Andrew Carnegie gave the steel business, and the men who are employed at the furnaces and mills are the ones who first feel a change of the industry from royalty to serfdom. There are few lines of Pittsburgh street cars which can point obtain patronage from a steel plant, a furnace or some industry the operation of which is independent of the operation of the steel plants. From some of these today there comes no patronage. From others it is much smaller, while from still others there is intermittent patronage, more men being employed at some times than others. It is not the regular large daily crowds that totaled into tremendous figures at the close of the year.

In the traction business it is a proverb that there should be an increase of 10 per cent each month over the number of passengers carried during the same month of the preceding year. This idea is based upon the growth of population and the growth also of the habit of using street cars. The Pittsburgh Railways Company and the companies which preceded that corporation in the traction business here had realized that growth each year. The present year is marking an exception. Instead of showing the increase that should be made, the company is not even hauling as many passengers as were hauled one year ago.

In a general way the blame for this lies with the steel business, as explained above, but that does not tell the whole story. There are many other lines of occupation that are made prosperous or otherwise by the fluctuations of Pittsburgh's main industry. Stores, factories turning out supplies of various kinds, foundries, etc., all have felt the difference in "times" and the employes have not been going so regularly to work as before.

In many cases where a year ago a man would have jumped on a street car to go from his office to a railroad station, he now walks. When he had a half-mile between him and a point where he had an engagement, he would formerly take a street car, but he finds now that he needs the exercise and keeps the nickel in his pocket. With jobs disappearing all round him, the economy in small things becomes a matter which receives consideration.

It is a peculiar fact, however, that there does not seem to be so much decrease of the park picnic business. The picnics are as numerous as it is claimed, and are as well patronized as they were heretofore. One picnic during the past week needed 70 special cars to take the party to the park.

PITTSBURGH CAPITAL ACTIVE IN ARIZONA

Bright Prospects of the Copper Rock & Gold Quartz Company.

Pittsburgh capital is to have a hand in the development of 140 acres of mining property in the region of Bisbee, Arizona. The Copper Rock and Gold Quartz Company, formed in 1897, has been reincorporated under the laws of Arizona with a capital of $1,000,000. Exploratory work will be started at once and the development will begin September 1.

The acreage is about three-quarters of a mile southeast of property owned and operated by the Calumet and Arizona and Pittsburgh and Arizona companies, which are well known here both for their wonderful productivity and because of their belonging to prominent Pittsburghers. The Copper Queen mine is also nearby.

J. McP. Miller of Bisbee, president of the new organization, was in the city last week, and stated that it will be but a short time until the mines will be producers. He said that the face of one tunnel is now showing a $24 value. The ore, he says, is rich in copper, silver, gold and zinc, as was shown by a huge collection of specimens he had on exhibition at the St. Charles hotel.

Among the Pittsburghers now interested are J. M. Hartman, George Isaacs, Dr. E. L. Neff and J. J. Wesling. Attorney F. H. Hatch, I. N. Ennis and the law firm of Sayers & Chesh of Columbus, O., are also interested. The company has offices at Columbus and Mt. Pleasant, Pa., and will soon have an office in this city.

"Our tract," Mr. Miller said, "comprises 10 claims and is in the midst of five producing shafts. It will be a close rival of the Verde of Jerome. The Higgins Developing company's tract is near. The development work on our claims consists of one 40-foot tunnel, another of 362 feet and several development shafts. The assay of the large tunnel shows at 75 feet depth $7.20 in gold and 28 cents in silver, with a trace of copper. At the breast of the 362 foot tunnel the ore assays $5.05 in gold, 62 cents in silver and $3.38 in copper."

The specimens which Mr. Miller had with him included one of moss copper, one of copper, talc and lime, another of pure copper in quartz and several others of malachite, asurite and rubyaite.

NO CHANGE IN PRICES.

The Schedules for Billets and Steel Rails Will Not Be Reduced.

NEW YORK, June 25.—(Special.)—The Wall Street Journal today says: Beginning in July most of the steel and iron pools will meet to reaffirm existing schedules for the third quarter and the last half of the year. Unless present conditions change, there will be few if any changes in the existing schedules.

The question of reducing the price of billets, of steel rails and other products controlled by pools has already been discussed by the leading producers. There will be no reduction in rail prices, and the billet pool is practically certain to continue its schedule.

PYROTECHNICS PROTECTED.

Schenley Park Fourth of July Display Not Affected by Weather.

Extraordinary precautions are being taken to prevent bad weather from interfering with the pyrotechnic display in Schenley park on the night of July 4. Heretofore heavy tents have been erected over the fireworks in course of preparation, but they were found inadequate to prevent the rain and damp getting in.

A. G. Pratt & Co. secured the contract this year and are spending hundreds of dollars in substantial wooden sheds to cover the mines and paraphernalia. L. L. Gardner, pyrotechnical expert, will be here tomorrow to take charge of the entire work and a force of men will be there night and day to push the work along.

Contributions amounting to $3,800 have been received by the mayor, but as $5,000 is required for the fireworks alone, much more will have to be raised to meet all the expenses.

Many Children Take the Pledge.

At St. Joseph's Catholic church, Bloomfield, 105 children will receive their first communion this morning. Members of the casino connected with the congregation will hold their outing at Calhoun park next Thursday. Coadjutor Bishop J. F. Regis Canevin confirmed 200 children at St. John the Baptist church, Liberty avenue and Tenth street, on Friday. Over 400 children pledged themselves to abstain from all intoxicating liquors till they reach the age of 25 years.

ANTICS OF A TROLLEY POLE; BIG BRIDGE IS ELECTRIFIED

Ninth Street Structure Charged With the Current. Downtown System "Grounded"—Rapid Work of Emergency Crews Soon Straightens Out Trouble.

With a crack and flash the breaker in the switchboard at the Cecil alley station of the Pittsburgh Railways Company blew out about 2 p. m. yesterday and instantly all the cars on one of the downtown circuits stopped. The emergency crew knew that something serious had happened. It was an indication that a trolley wire had fallen or that something occurred which had "grounded" the system. The emergency crew located the trouble on the Ninth street circuit and started out at top speed to find it and make repairs.

But it was on a city-bound Avalon car that excitement reigned. The car had reached the third pier when the trolley slipped off the wire and before the car could be stopped the rope broke and the trolley pole rested tightly against the wire and one of the steel beams of the bridge. The entire structure thus became charged with electricity. Intermittently a shower of molten metal fell over the sides of the open car as the trolley pole and the beam melted from the effects of the current. Women got off precipitately, while the men, who have become accustomed to electrical pyrotechnics, stepped off calmly to see what was wrong.

The motorman, bare of hand and red of hair, climbed to the roof and by throwing the rope around the pole tried to release it. The only result was more sparks from the beam and more tremors by the women. The pole wouldn't be moved. In the meantime it was being melted off. Just as the conductor, also red of hair, was going to telephone to summon the emergency wagon, that vehicle came dashing down Ninth street. From Allegheny came the Park way wagon, followed by a tower wagon, which had been making repairs in Lacock street. Evidently that breaker had summoned all the wagons and men in the district. The emergency men scrambled over the roof of the car like so many flies on a piece of cinnamon cake in a screenless bakeshop. The first man who grasped the trolley pole found it just about severed by the current. It broke off at the point of contact with the beam. Immediately it was released the "ground" was broken and the held-up cars began to move. As on the high seas, a "jury" trolley pole was fitted into the socket on the roof of the car and it was started back to Allegheny with an emergency man holding it against the wire so that the trip could be made in safety. The wagons departed and the women boarded the next car and rode the two blocks to Liberty avenue, vowing that they had never had such a scare in their lives.

COMMITTEES WORKING FOR ORPHANS' PICNIC

Big Organization Is Running Smoothly With Great Work of Charity.

The sub-committees have all been appointed for the orphans' picnic in Calhoun park, July 13 and 14, so that when the general committee meets this evening at the Epiphany lyceum, the next step in the monster organization can be launched without any difficulty. Each of the members of the various sub-committees have received instructions detailing exactly what is expected of them.

The report of the ticket committee has not been received for the sale of the past week. By far the most important feature of the committee meeting this evening is the contemplated visit of Patrick Dolan, president of the United Mine Workers. The leader has canvassed all the local unions asking support of the picnic and has a surprise in store for the committee, which, according to rumors, may send the cash receipts above the limit set by the committee.

The same women and young men who were in charge of the lot contest a year ago have been reappointed and accepted the charge.

The general chairman is T. A. Dunn; vice chairmen, Hugh Murphy and J. M. Molamphy. The chairmen of the various committees are: Reception, J. Dawson Callery; distribution of tickets, Edward Kelly, Jr.; box office, Frank McKnight; gate No. 1, Thomas M. Hughes; gate No. 2, George M. McNulty; advertising, N. S. Reid; tables, Hugh Murphy; ice, T. A. Dunn; transportation, J. Dawson Callery; St. Louis contest, William Totten; general supply, Henry Fitzpatrick; dancing, F. J. Brady; lot contest, George McLaughlin.

WABASH INVITATIONS ARE NOT NEGOTIABLE

Notice Is Given That the Guests Invited to Go on the Special Train to St. Louis Must Appear in Person.

Col. W. D. Holliday, traffic manager of the Wabash Pittsburgh Terminal Railway Company, and Col. F. H. Tristam, assistant general passenger agent of the Wabash, completed yesterday the list of acceptances of invitations to join the special train over the new line next Saturday. The list is now closed, it being required that all signify their intention by yesterday.

Certain events of the past week have caused the Wabash officials to issue the following notice in connection with this trip.

It is discovered that a misunderstanding, which may result in serious disappointment, has arisen in connection with the invitations for the special train of guests over the new Wabash line to St. Louis next Saturday.

These invitations include the city officials and councils of both Pittsburgh and Allegheny and the Allegheny county officials with representatives of the chamber of commerce, the Merchants and Manufacturers' association and the Pittsburgh newspapers.

The invitations are strictly personal, not transferrable or negotiable in any manner. To those who have notified the proper Wabash officials of their acceptance of their invitations a card of identification will be issued. This card will be exchanged on the train for transportation only when presented by the person to whom the original invitation was issued.

If presented by any other person, the company will find it necessary to take up the card and refuse the holder admission to or accommodations on the train.

This step is determined upon as a protection to the many persons invited who plan to make the trip. As it is impossible to have on the trip all the friends of the Wabash, the company knew it better plan than to invite those enumerated above as representing the community.

NEWSBOYS TO GO IN GREAT STYLE

Chronicle Telegraph Will Send Forty of Them to the World's Fair.

ALL HUSTLING FOR COUPONS

"Kin I cut out de coupon, mister?"

"The coupon? What coupon; what do you mean?" interrogated the man as he reached for his evening paper. The man is a member of the Pittsburgh stock exchange, and the idea of a newsboy cutting coupons seemed to tickle him.

"I'm goin' to de worl's fair at St. Looey," replied the boy with apparent irrelevance. "An' I'm not goin' to ride on de bumpers, neither, nor on a freight; nor even in a day coach like common folks. I'm goin' to travel like Vanderbilt and George Gould and de rest of de swell guys, in a Pullman palace sleeper. An' when I gets to St. Loo-ey I'm goin' to put up at a swell hotel—no cheap hash-house in mine. An' I got four whole days to see de show an' don't boy to cough up a cent. I see de hull blame bizness, sideshows an' all. An' I gets five plunks to blow besides. Forty of de newsies is goin' in a bunch an' you c'n bet dey'll warm up St. Loo-ey some."

"I'm not givin' you no pipe dream; dat's all straight," declared the boy earnestly, as the man smiled quizzically.

"But what has all this to do with coupons?" asked the man.

"Well, you see de Chronicle Telegraph pays de whole shot," explained the boy. "An' de forty fellers dat gets de most coupons goes to St. Loo-ey, see?"

The man saw and readily granted the desired permission to cut out the coupon. Then the boy darted away and hustled harder than ever to make up for time lost in explaining the connection between the Chronicle Telegraph coupons and the world's fair.

Believing that an opportunity to visit the world's fair under the most favorable circumstances would not only give a vast amount of pleasure to the hardworking, hustling little chaps who sell the newspapers on the street, but would also be an education and an inspiration for them, the Chronicle Telegraph has decided to send 40 of the most industrious and energetic of the newsboys in Pittsburgh, Allegheny, Braddock, Homestead and McKeesport. The territory has been divided into districts and a certain number of boys will go from each district.

The boys will travel in Pullman sleeping cars and during their four days' stay at the fair will be put up at the Grand View hotel, one of the best in St. Louis.

They will visit the fair every day and will be shown everything, including all the shows on the Pike. The entire trip will not cost the boys one cent. The Chronicle Telegraph even provides spending money for them—each boy receiving $5 for that purpose.

If you will cut out the coupon in the Chronicle Telegraph each evening and give it to your favorite newsboy you will help him to attain one of the greatest pleasures he has ever experienced in his life. The boys in the various districts who receive the most coupons will make the trip to the world's fair.

You needn't take the trouble to fill out the coupon. Just hand it to the boy. He'll do the rest.

No Decision in Beavers Case.

NEW YORK, June 25.—After hearing arguments of counsel for George W. Beavers, former superintendent of the salary and allowances division of the postoffice department, on a motion to quash an indictment charging him with accepting bribes, Judge Thomas in the United States court today reserved his decision and allowed counsel until next Wednesday to file briefs. The hearing before United States Commissioner Benedict on the question of Beavers' removal to Washington to answer to an indictment found against him in the District of Columbia was postponed to next Tuesday.

Wrecked Steamer to Be Exhibited.

VANCOUVER, B. C., June 25.—The steamer Beaver, the first to cross the Pacific under her own steam, in 1835, lying wrecked at the mouth of Vancouver harbor for 12 years, is to be raised by the city of Vancouver and placed on exhibition at Stanley park, with a placard reciting the historical event in which she took part.

Laborer Fell from Roof.

Michael Garossi, an Italian laborer at the Clairton steel works, fell 30 feet from the roof of a building yesterday and was probably fatally hurt. He alighted on a pile of bricks and fractured his skull and hip. He was taken to the McKeesport hospital.

ANNUAL SUMMER CLEARING
SALE OF FINE PIANOS AND ORGANS AT AMBUHL BROS.

For the Next Ten Days This Well-Known Firm Will Offer Its Patrons the Greatest Bargains of the Year in Fine Pianos—A General Clearing of Entire Stock Begins Monday—Kimball, Steinway, Chickering Bros., Hallet & Davis, Kranich & Bach, Hardman, Mason & Hamlin, Estey and Many Others Included in Sale.

FULLY 30% TO 50% DISCOUNT

On Monday, June 27, we shall begin our regular Annual Summer Clearing Sale of Pianos and Organs; this time on a much larger scale and with greater price inducements than ever before.

There are hundreds of people that remember with much satisfaction the remarkable savings they made in the price of their pianos purchased of this firm during their summer clearing sale last year and the year before, and there will be those that will remember THIS clearing sale with even greater satisfaction, as the quality of the instruments we offer is of the very highest and the prices lower than was ever quoted on instruments of like grade.

A clean sweep of 30 to 50 per cent discount will be made on every piano in the house, and all the best and most renowned instruments are here, such as Kimball, Steinway, Hallet & Davis, Chickering, Kranich & Bach, Mason & Hamlin, Emerson, Hardman, Estey, Capen, Heller & Co., Brinkerhoff, Davenport & Tracey, Whitney, Hinman, Ilgenfritz & Co., and many others, some entirely new, some second-hand and some only slightly used.

Everyone knows that these names represent the very cream of the piano trade, and the most fastidious would be glad to own any one of them, but it is not often that a discount of 30 to 50 per cent can be had on instruments of the grade of any one of these.

The bargains offered in slightly used pianos at this summer clearing sale are most extraordinary.

A beautiful $700 Kimball upright, in a San Domingo mahogany case, used less than one year, a perfect beauty in every particular, will be sold for $315.

A very fine $500 Steinway upright, in an elegant dark case, that can hardly be told from new, it being in excellent condition, will be sold for $250.

Two Hallet & Davis uprights, one in a mahogany case and the other in walnut, one of the very latest designs, neither having been used enough to hurt it in the least, will be sold for $235 each. The original price of each of these pianos was $450.

A Kranich & Bach upright, rosewood case, somewhat scuffed, but good tone and action, excellent for a beginner, will be sold for $160.

You are invited to make comparisons between these and pianos offered elsewhere at similar prices.

Remember, NEW pianos of the abovenamed makes will be sold at actual discounts of from 30 to 50 per cent.

This is a great opportunity for cash buyers, as they never had so much real piano value offered for their money before. Easy payments will also be accepted.

A few new upright pianos sent us as samples, the kind that sell ordinarily from $300 to $325, will be sold in this summer clearing sale for $210 each, also, a few as low as $98 each.

This is an excellent opportunity for parties having children that they want to start in music, but are not sure they will take to it, and so don't care to risk much money. We will take them back any time within two years at the full purchase price to apply on something better.

We shall make some great reductions during this summer clearing sale in our piano-player department.

A fine Apollo player, used less than one year and in perfect order, with a good supply of music, will be sold for $140.

Some fine Kimball players, among the latest and best machines in the market, slightly second-hand, from $160 to $200.

A special reduction of from 30 to 50 per cent will also be made on piano-player music during this summer clearing sale.

Especially sweeping is the reduction in prices in our organ department. Here are Kimball, Hinman & Hamlin, Estey, Clough & Warren, Ithaca, and a host of other organs, some new and some second-hand, all to be sold at a discount from the regular price of from 30 to 50 per cent, and in some cases even greater discounts than that.

An excellent Mason & Hamlin organ can be had here during this summer clearing sale for $25; also, an exceptionally good tone Estey organ for $35; others in the same proportion.

Sale begins Monday morning at 8 o'clock and lasts but 10 days.

GOLD BAR STORY AGAINST DELANEY IS DROPPED

DETROIT, June 25.—Edward Delaney, a bartender, arrested by the police several weeks ago on suspicion of connection with the theft of a gold bar valued at $22,000 from the Pacific Express Company's office in the Union station here, was today discharged by Justice Sellers. The police asked that the charge against Delaney be dropped, as the evidence did not warrant bringing him to trial.

PARIS, June 25.—A dispatch to the foreign office from Constantinople today announced that the sultan signed an irade yesterday evening approving the porte's decision to make complete restitution and redress to the persecuted Armenians. MAYOR HAYS GETS TIP FROM BRAND

Executive Must Refuse to Sign Bank Agreements if He Is Consistent.

HE HAS GONE ON RECORD

Straight Talk by the Seventeenth Ward Councilman—Mayor Says He Will Consult Attorney—Larkin Announces He Will Go to Court.

"You have stated in the newspapers that the resolution appointing the new city depositories was illegal and it will be up to you to be consistent and refuse to sign the agreements with those depositories or reverse yourself and sign them," said Councilman William Brand to Mayor Hays yesterday.

"I thought that I was out of this matter altogether," replied the mayor.

"That's where they fooled you," said Brand. "They did not compel you to sign the resolution, but they will make you sign the agreements to carry the resolution into effect."

"I will see my attorney before I sign the agreements," said the mayor.

The above conversation took place yesterday in the city clerk's office, the mayor, Brand and President Ward of common council forming a group after the adjournment of the meeting of the Filipino committee. Brand also paid President Ward a compliment.

"Mr. Ward here believes it is all right to pass a bill without reading it. He so ruled on the bank agreements, but I hope, Mr. Mayor, before you sign them that you will at least read them."

The subject appeared distasteful to the mayor and it was dropped. Then Brand and the mayor got into an argument over the firemen's resolution and the Seventeenth ward councilman expressed himself strongly in regard to the mayor's attitude.

Controller Larkin held a long conference with Councilman Brand yesterday morning. He also had a conference with Brand the day before, at which the city depositories were discussed. The controller told Brand, as published yesterday in The Gazette, that he would apply for an injunction to restrain the city treasurer from transferring the funds of the city to the new depositories.

The controller has the alternative of asking for a writ upon the mayor to restrain him from signing the agreements with the banks, but he thought the mayor should have the privilege of passing judgment on the matter without interference. Like Brand, the controller says the matter will soon be up to the mayor and the people will await the mayor's action to see whether he stands by or reverses the position he took several weeks ago.

THREE PENSION CLERKS POISONED BY PEAS

Beautiful Young Women Were Badly Frightened, but Physicians Saved Them.

"Look at the ink on your lips."

This brief exclamation caused more excitement in the federal building last week than has been seen there for many a day. The words were uttered by one of the young women clerks in the pension department, directed at another woman clerk who sat working busily near by.

Investigation developed that three of the clerks in that room had the same black lips. It could not be ink, it was then evident. In an instant cries were heard: "Oh, the canned peas!"

People rushed into the room, frightened at the screaming. The three women were nearly prostrated. They had eaten a can of choice peas for the mid-day lunch. They had relished them and mentioned how good they were at the time. But they had been poisoned by the food.

Three physicians were called; beds were constructed temporarily out of the huge registers used there, and for an hour that part of the pension department most closely resembled a hospital. Antidotes were administered by the physicians, but, lest these should fail, all the women employes on that floor volunteered the remedies of their grandmothers. A book on antidotes was consulted before the doctors arrived, and hot milk was resorted to as a first expedient.

The clerks laid on the hard book beds and stayed there, surrounded by friends, until pronounced out of danger by the attendants.

Never were three more beautiful mouths spoiled by such a process, but the recovery was complete.

CROKER IN IRELAND AND LIKES IT BETTER

Never Found Frigid Atmosphere of England Much to His Liking.

LONDON, June 15.—Richard Croker, I am told, is seldom seen at Wantage in these days. He never has found the somewhat frigid social atmosphere of England much to his liking and is consequently devoting most of his time to his Irish residence, Parkiston lodge on the Curragh of Kildare, where his money enables him to play the role of squire with much more success. The lodge is not a pretentious place, but is large enough to provide accommodation for some two score guests, and among those at present enjoying Mr. Croker's hospitality are several American friends.

Never have the simple Kildare folk seen entertainments on so lavish a scale before. Motor cars are there in abundance, brakes, broughams and dogcarts crowd the country roads and spirited hunters are provided from the stables for guests who delight in a dash across country. All this adds to the prosperity of the neighborhood and as the scanty earnings of the peasantry are increased by many odd jobs and generous tips they bless the day when the ex-boss of Tammany came among them and devoutly hope that he may long dwell in their midst. Croker was too long accustomed to popularity in America to be indifferent to it, from whatever source it comes, and it is more than likely that their wish will be gratified.

The situation of Parkiston lodge suits him admirably. It is sufficiently near to Dublin to admit of friends running out for dinner and returning the same night if they wish. The picturesque country round about appeals strongly to men of sporting tastes, affording plenty of good shooting and abundance of room for cross-country riding.

CORRESPONDENTS SEE KOREAN EMPEROR AS JAPAN'S GUEST

SEOUL, June 25.—(Evening.)—The members of the Japanese diet, the foreign attaches and newspaper correspondents who are making a tour of the theater of war on the ship Manchuria as guests of the Japanese were received by the emperor of Korea today. The crown prince of Korea stood at his majesty's side during the reception. The emperor said he hoped the correspondents had found Korea interesting and hospitable. Frederick Villiers, replying for the correspondents said he and his colleagues appreciated the courtesies extended to them in Korea.

JUDGE REFUSED MANY TRANSFERS

Westmoreland County Court Turns Down Applications of Hotel Men.

OLD PRACTICE ABOLISHED

Doty Stops Wholesale Barter in Licenses. Rejects Contracts of County Commissioners for All New Bridges, Including Donora Structure.

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

GREENSBURG, PA., June 25.—A radical departure in the disposal of applications for transfers of liquor licenses was made by Presiding Judge Lucien W. Doty of the Westmoreland common pleas court this morning when 13 hotel men of the county were absolutely refused permission to give over their licenses. It was remarked from the bench that there was a disposition on the part of the hotel men to barter and hawk their licenses.

Judge Doty said that it was not the purpose of the law and of the court to grant licenses and then to permit them to be hawked about and thus to lower the standard of the landlords secured to conduct the hotels of the county. He maintained that a license was in the nature of a contract for a year and that it should not be avoided or a substitution made.

The court will no longer permit a man to secure a license for his property, thus putting a fictitious value upon it and then permit him to sell the property with the hope of being reinstated as a licensee on the license courts of the county. The death of the applicant, or an execution issued for debt against him resulting in a sheriff's sale are the valid reasons for which the court will entertain an application for a transfer and the stereotyped doctor's certificate, setting forth that the illness of the applicant's wife, together with his own ill health, will no longer suffice.

The applicants refused transfers were Mrs. Margaret Burns, Samuel R. Lehman, Thomas H. Dalton, Jacob Brecker, W. E. Lyda, Mrs. Elizabeth Hopkins, Maxwell & Murphy, Peter B. Brenizer, E. C. Nicely, James Dolan, William W. Cunningham, Jacob Mayor and John Albertaletti.

Judge Doty also disapproved all contracts entered into by the board of county commissioners for the erection of bridges. The most important ruling referred to the structure spanning the Monongahela river between Webster and Donora. The report of the viewers, recommending the erection of the bridge, was disallowed. Judge Doty said that the present is not the time to project and build new bridges. He said no new bridges will be built at this time, but the cases where bridges have been swept away by floods will receive due attention.

GERMANY IS FLOODED WITH COUNTERFEITS

Bad American Money Is Passed Upon Unsuspecting Shop Keepers of Berlin.

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

BERLIN, June 25.—During the last two months the city of Berlin has been flooded with spurious American money, and many complaints have been received from people, especially smaller merchants, who have been swindled by accepting these notes in payment for goods from people who claimed to have just returned from the United States.

So far the authorities have been unable to discover where the money came from, but whoever imported or manufactured the bills, must have reaped a rich harvest, though he disposed of the green goods at cut rates.

A cigar dealer in the Friedrichstrasse had a whole series of the bills from $1 to $100 on exhibition in his window, announcing it for sale for two marks (about 50 cents).

A waiter, Herman Motteit, bought the series and went to a cafe, where he offered a $10 bill in payment for his order, and when the head waiter looked the bill over very carefully, he assured him that it was all right, whereupon the cashier took it at a valuation of 40 marks, but immediately sent it to a bank which pronounced it counterfeit.

The waiter who had passed it was then arrested, though he protested his innocence.

The cigar dealer was also arrested, and insisted that he had never sold the money, which he had bought from an American for genuine. It appears that most, if not all of the bills, have been sold or given out by two German-Americans, of whom the police have a good description, the men themselves cannot be found.

The police of other great European cities, where they are likely to try and continue their traffic, have, however, been informed and it is hoped that they will be caught somewhere else.

SQUADRON ORDERED TO LEAVE TANGIER

America Does Not Contemplate Reclamations Upon Moorish Government.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—Congratulations and commendation for their successful work of obtaining the release of Ion Perdicaris and Cromwell Varley were cabled to Consul General Gummere and Rear Admiral Chadwick by the state and navy departments today. The administration is highly gratified that the release of the captives was accomplished without resort to force. Rear Admiral Chadwick responded, thanking the secretary of the navy for his appreciation.

Orders were sent to Admiral Chadwick for the South Atlantic squadron, which he commands, and the European squadron, commanded by Admiral Jewell, to proceed from Tangier on the cruises to which they had previously been dispatched.

The state department does not contemplate any reclamations upon the Moorish government on account of the Perdicaris incident. In its view that government has suffered severely, both from a financial point of view and in national humiliation through its compliance with the demands of Secretary Hay that the captives be released.

INSURGENTS JR. O. U. A. M. FORM NEW ORGANIZATION

Adopts Title of Order of Independent Americans — Alleghenian State Councillor.

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

READING, PA., June 25.—A conference of delegates representing nearly all the councils of the state known as the "insurgents" of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics was held here all of today. The purpose of the convention was to decide upon the best policy for the order to pursue since Judge Audenried of Philadelphia decided against them in his decision as to which of the two bodies represents the state organization.

The sentiment of the delegates was that the order discontinue fighting the case and secede absolutely and then form a new organization. It was finally decided this afternoon to withdraw from the Jr. O. U. A. M. and hereafter to be known as the Order of Independent Americans. The objects shall be:

"To maintain and promote the interests of Americans and shield them from the depressing effects of foreign competition; to assist Americans in obtaining employment; to encourage Americans in business, and to maintain the public school system."

It was decided to hold the first annual convention at Altoona on the third Tuesday in September, when a complete code of laws will be adopted.

These permanent officers were elected: Charles A. Westerman, Allegheny, state councillor; W. H. Whitehead, Jr., Weissport, vice councillor; Frank Innes, Chester, junior past councillor; Evan G. Badger, Philadelphia, state treasurer; W. A. Pike, Philadelphia, secretary.

SETH LOW MAY GET DIPLOMATIC POSITION

Former Mayor of New York Is the Guest of President Roosevelt.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

WASHINGTON, June 25.—Seth Low, former mayor of New York city, is the guest of President Roosevelt at the White House, and although denial is made, there are reports current that he will be given a diplomatic position if President Roosevelt is elected.

There will be several changes in the foreign service next November. Powell Clayton of Arkansas will resign as minister to Mexico. It is considered altogether likely that George V. T. Meyer of Massachusetts will relinquish his post as ambassador to Italy about that time. Henry White, secretary of the American embassy at London, will probably get the first vacant embassy. Gossip has been busy with the possible retirement of Horace Porter, American ambassador at Paris; Joseph Choate, American ambassador at London, and Mr. McCormick, American ambassador at St. Petersburg, but there is nothing definite on which to predict that there will be changes in these posts.

It is not considered likely that Mr. White or Mr. Low would either care to be ambassador to Mexico. Mr. Meyer has been expected to retire for some time. It having been said that President McKinley expected him to remain at Rome only a year, but that there was any such an arrangement has been denied by Senator Hoar, for whom Senator Lodge urged the appointment of Mr. Meyer. Mr. Low will return to New York tomorrow.

NATIONAL GYMNASTS ARE GATHERING HERE

Delegates Were Entertained at Large Banquet in Allegheny Turner Hall Last Night.

The first session of the 21st biennial convention of the North American Gymnastic association was held in Allegheny Turner hall, Canal and Chestnut streets, last night, when the 300 delegates, representing every large city in the country, were tendered a banquet by the local officers of the organization. The convention proper will open this morning in Central Turner hall, Forbes street, and will continue until Wednesday night.

This is the first time since 1870 that the society has met in this city, and great efforts are being made to make the gathering memorable. Among the speakers at last night's meeting were Mayor Wyman of Allegheny, Herman Lieber, president of the association, and Theodore Stempfel, its secretary.

Quite a number of the delegates responded to toasts and the program was interspersed with musical selections rendered by a chorus from the Allegheny Turners.

Mayor Hays will open the convention in Turner hall this morning, and before the delegates leave they will be shown the vast industries of the Pittsburgh district. A trip will also be taken on the Monongahela river.

Suspected Pickpockets Fined.

James Curry and George Bennett, arrested as professional pickpockets Friday night were fined $50 and costs by Magistrate Stewart yesterday. Neither of the men denied the charges made against them.

ALAKE OF ABETOKUTA DROPS OUT OF LONDON

Most Dramatic Incident in African Monarch's Visit—His Interview With Baroness.

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

LONDON, June 25.—The Alake of Abeokuta has left London for a short time, and no more dramatic incident has occurred than his interview with the Baroness Burdett Coutts.

The African monarch expressed the desire to see this benevolent lady, and an interview was arranged, when the Alake, arrayed in gorgeous robes, presented himself before the baroness at her London house.

When he entered her presence he knelt according to native custom and then stated through his interpreter that one of his first desires on visiting England had been to see the Baroness Burdett Coutts, in order to thank her for the great boon she had conferred upon his country in her father's time.

Over 40 years ago, during the great Lancashire cotton famine, the baroness had sent the two first cotton gins ever seen in Abeokuta, and thus had been the founder of the chief industry of the country. The face of the aged lady lit with pleasure, and she told the king of the terrible incidents of the Lancashire cotton famine, and said that here indeed was a ray of light cast over those dark days, and that it was a joy to her in her 90th year to receive such a tribute from that far-off land.

The native king was visibly affected, and replied that he was glad to think she had lived to hear the expressions of gratitude which he brought, for what she had done for his father and his people.

ECUADOR CITIZENS RESIST INCREASE OF WATER RATES

Action of Municipal Council Precipitates Riot, and Many Are Wounded.

[Associated Press Cable to The Gazette.]

GUAYAQUIL, ECUADOR, June 25.—Considerable excitement, followed by rioting, has resulted here from the action of the municipality in raising the tariff for water services. Two meetings were held in this city during the evenings of June 23 and 24 and on the night of June 24 about 5,000 citizens paraded the streets protesting against the council's action.

Mounted policemen with drawn swords tried to disperse the paraders, who attacked the police with stones, after which they went to their homes. Before dispersing, however, the rioters stoned the house of the president of the municipal council. Eleven policemen and nine citizens were wounded.

The board of health has declined to open the port to southern arrivals, excepting those from Paita, Peru, where an outbreak of bubonic plague was announced June 11. The American minister, Mr. Sampson, and Mrs. Sampson are returning home by the first steamer.

Child Dragged to Death.

HELENA, ARK., June 25.—The 12-year old son of C. B. Walton, manager of the Worthen place, west of this city, fell from a mule and his foot becoming fast in the stirrup he was dragged to death before the frightened animal could be stopped. The boy, Charles Hooker Walton, was carrying water to the field hands, and had just mounted and started on a trip when the fatal accident occurred. The father was standing near, but was unable to save the life of his boy.

B'nai Brith Outing.

B'nai Brith, under the auspices of Ibn Gabriel lodge, No. 114, will hold its annual outing today. The steamer Francis J. Torrance will leave the Market street wharf at 9:30 a. m., going up the river to Moss Side park, where the day will be spent. District President Isadore Rosenthal and others will make addresses.

DOWIE BRINGS FAIR CONVERT

Swedish Woman of Wealth and Noble Birth Joins Zion City's Hosts.

SHE IS CLOSELY GUARDED

"Elijah III.," His Wife and "Unkissed" Son Arrive in New York from Europe and Australia—Created Scene on the Steamship.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 25.—Bringing with him a young and beautiful Swedish noble woman, whose wealth is to be devoted to the uses of Zion City, John Alexander Dowie, the self-styled "Elijah III.," returned from Australia and Europe today on the Lucania. With the Chicago "prophet" also were his wife and the "unkissed son," Dr. A. J. Gladstone Dowie, the latter glorying in the fact that neither Europe nor Australia could take that badge of courage from him.

Never was a jewel guarded so assiduously as the mysterious woman convert. On the passenger list she figured as Miss Ruth Hofer, but that is said to be her nom de Zion. She is not yet 25, her cheeks are red with the blush of youth, and her dainty little figure and aristocratic manner betray the fact that she is an uncommon convert.

Compelled to seek refuge from the English reporters on board the ship the day before the Lucania sailed, for the reason that no London hotel would receive him, Dowie fulminated against all reporters during the entire voyage.

Dowie's presence aboard was unknown to man passengers until the first night out. In the smoking room a cloud of cigar smoke was rising and the cards were being shuffled, when the figure of the fat little "prophet" appeared in the doorway. A black skull cap covered his head and his black robes were long and flowing.

"Connivers with the imps of darkness, stop!" he howled. The players arose, amazed. Then began a flow of billingsgate that shocked the passengers. One of the players quietly arose, shoved the hoary headed "reincarnation" out of the doorway and locked the door. Outside, undaunted, Dowie howled himself breathless. The next evening the smoking room frequenters were prepared. Dowie came to the door about 8 o'clock.

"You are all going to perdition. You creatures of perdition, stop!—I, Elijah, say stop!"

Ten smokers with rank cigars burning brightly surrounded the intruder and held him while they puffed the smoke into his face, when he cried for mercy. Gagging and gasping, Dowie retreated to his cabin and did not appear in the smoking room afterward.

After this reprimand Dowie did not attempt to run the ship. So friendly did he become that when, at the steward's cabin, he was slapped on the back by Bostock, the animal trainer, he almost smiled. Dowie was buying candy.

"Fond of candy, doctor?" asked Bostock.

"I am fond of good candy," he replied. He munched a chocolate gravely. "About two years ago nearly 150 children were sick in Zion. We prayed and could not understand. So I sent for two candy-makers, dumped the stuff we had in stock into our lake, and now the children are well and everybody wants Zion candy. We cannot make enough of it. It is a glorious business enterprise."

SMALL HUMBERT SWINDLE.

German Woman Spreads Story of Great Inheritance Coming and Borrows Money.

BERLIN, June 25.—(Special Cable.)—Some time ago the people of Aedenburg were greatly excited at the report that a former faithless lover had repented on his deathbed and left a fortune of several million marks to his old sweetheart, a Mrs. Prueser, who at that time was working in a factory. The whole story of the inheritance appears to be a Mme. Humbert affair in smaller style.

By spreading the story of the many millions which she was to inherit from her sweetheart at Kobleu, Mrs. Pruesser succeeded in borrowing considerable amounts of money from citizens in the factory town, and when she had pretended to be on a trip to Kobleu to arrange with the executors for the transfer of the money she had really concealed herself in her home for a week.

When her creditors began to press her for money and wondered that the millions did not materialize she invented a story that she had been the victim of a swindler who had made her pay 500 marks for the news of the inheritance and for the necessary papers, and even carried this so far that she swore out a warrant for his arrest.

As nobody else in the town had seen anything of the mysterious stranger the police, however, became suspicious and arrested her, just as she was getting ready to leave for America, and she has now confessed that the whole story of the repentant sweetheart and the millions originated in her own brain.

When Lynch Threw Wild Ubrey Took a Tumble.

The intense excitement in the ninth inning of yesterday's ball game at Exposition park resulted in serious injury to John Ubrey, aged 36, a sub-fireman of 205 Chestnut street, Allegheny. Ubrey had been roosting on the left field fence during the game. The closeness of the contest worked him up to such a degree of excitement that when Lynch made his wild throw in the ninth, allowing two Chicago men to cross the plate, Ubrey fell off the fence. He is now suffering from a fracture of the left leg, with numerous bruises.

ART WORLD LAMENTING FATE OF BUSHEY SCHOOL

Professor Herkomer Labored for Twenty-One Years to Make It a Success.

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

LONDON, June 25.—There is much lamentation in the world of art over the fate of the Bushey school. Prof. von Herkomer has for the last 20 years done a service to rising artists which it is difficult to estimate. He has unwearyingly labored to inspire this colony of young students in the pretty Hertfordshire village with a sense of the responsibility of their work, and a strong belief in the necessity for individuality in art.

"I have sought," said Prof. Herkomer, "for 21 years to get right into the character of each pupil, to correct some mannerism, some bad tendency, which crops up again and again in his or her pictures, and which has some mental trick as its foundation.

"There are old pupils at Bushey," he added, "more than 60 of them, with private studios, and they will always find me ready to give advice.

"Personally," added Prof. Herkomer, "I like to see artists pursue their own style. It is the revelation of their own character and their own personality.

"Moreover, the art school at Bushey has been able to demonstrate that it is possible for men and women to study together to the advantage of both."

Prof. Herkomer will remain in his own beautiful house, which he designed, where he has an exquisite collection of enamel and other objects of art. The wrought iron work of the hanging lamps, the wood panels on the walls and the beautiful decoration in silver are all the handicraft of his pupils.

I know of no story more touching than the one which Prof. Herkomer told a friend of mine when he was sitting to him for his portrait. He related that his aged father was among the pupils of his school, and that every day the old man took his place on the bench and bent for hours over his wood carving.

His sight was failing, and his hand was unsteady, and the work that he produced was often defective; but when he had gone to his rest his great son took his place, straightened the lines, sharpened the edges and corrected all imperfections, and then when the aged pupil returned to his work next morning he looked at it with delight, feeling that he had wrought far better than he knew, little guessing that the master hand had touched it in his absence.

SLOCUM DEATH LIST WILL EXCEED A THOUSAND

Kerosene and Lubricating Oil Barrels Found Where the Fire Started.

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 25.—That upwards of 1,000 persons perished in the burning of the excursion steamer General Slocum is now practically certain. According to an exhaustive report made by Police Inspector Schmittberger on the number of dead, missing, injured and uninjured in the disaster, it appears that 930 bodies have been recovered and that 93 persons absolutely known to have been aboard the vessel are still unaccounted for, bringing the total mortality of the disaster up to 1,031.

Those injured numbered 179 and of the throng of fully 1,500, who embarked on the excursion of St. Mark's church, but 236 escaped without injury. The report is the result of a minute inquiry made by a corps of 100 patrolmen, under the direction of the inspector.

A thorough examination today of the hull of the Slocum by Coroner Barry and Inspector Albertson, resulted in the discovery in the locker, in which the fire started, of a number of barrels which had contained kerosene and lubricating oil. The coroner's inquest will be continued on Tuesday and on Thursday the hearing by the federal grand jury will be opened.

...ON WILL HONOR HEROES

Encampment of Grand Army of Republic Is Expected to Be Big Affair.

VISITS TO THE OLD SHRINES

White Squadron Is to Take Part in the Gathering—Program Promises Veterans Many Visits to Historic Grounds of Long Ago.

BOSTON, MASS., June 25.—The annual encampment of the Grand Army, to be held here the week beginning August 15, promises to be one of the most largely attended gatherings of civil war veterans since the war. The old soldiers realize that they will not be able to attend national encampments many years longer. This makes many the more anxious to meet their comrades while they may.

The old commonwealth, and especially the city, feel that this is the last opportunity they will ever have to entertain the Grand Army. They are, therefore, making a great effort to have this one of the most memorable encampments the Grand Army has ever held. The department is bending every effort to make the occasion unique and enjoyable.

The entertainment for the week is to be elaborate. The committees having the matter in charge have broken away from established customs and will present new features for the guests. There will be the usual receptions and campfires and parades, but in addition there will be automobile parades, river carnivals, fish dinners on Massachusetts bay, surf bathing for those from the interior and excursions to Lexington, Concord, Plymouth Rock and other places.

Navy to Take Part.

The reception for the Women's Relief Corps will take place on Monday evening, the day of the arrival of most of the veterans. On Monday also will be the parade of the Naval veterans and ex-prisoners of War association. On Tuesday the parade of the Grand Army will take place. In the evening there will be a camp fire in Mechanics' building.

Wednesday will see the work of the encampment begin. That evening the visitors will be invited to take trains and go to Waltham to witness a river carnival. The watch city will be brilliantly illuminated and there will be room for hundreds of thousands of spectators along the banks of the river, while the unique craft will present a fairylike spectacle.

The business session will continue Thursday. That afternoon the delegates will be taken on an automobile ride. From Boston they will go out through Cambridge, Arlington, Lexington and Concord and the territory made famous by the revolutionary sires and along the British line of retreat. The return will be by way of Sudbury and Newton.

Navy to Take Newton.

One of the most interesting features of the week will be the evolutions of the "white squadron." Those who come from the inland cities and states will have opportunity to see something of Uncle Sam's navy as the secretary of the navy has promised to detail a squadron to come to Boston during the encampment. Boston, with its historic interest, seems to be a fitting place for the greatest encampment in the history of the Grand Army. The state has appropriated $50,000, the city $25,000 and patriotic citizens are contributing to swell this fund to the end that every emergency may be met. Free quarters will be provided for all who wish them. Those who wish to stay at hotels will not find any advance in rates, as the proprietors have guaranteed to maintain their regular prices. The parade is to be only two miles, over asphalt pavement, through the most beautiful section of Boston.

TROLLEY MAGNATE'S SON BECOMES A MOTORMAN

Cuts Loose from Father's Prestige to Make His Own Way.

ST. LOUIS, June 25.—From president of a literary society to motorman on the Intramural railway at the World's fair grounds, is a step taken by Delos Haynes, the popular East Side young man, who is anxious to follow in the footsteps of his father and learn the railroad business by experience at the brake.

Young Haynes is the son of L. C. Haynes, vice president and general manager of the Terminal St. Louis & Suburban Railway Company, a corporation with a network of lines connecting many Illinois towns.

Last February Delos was graduated from the St. Louis High school with honors. He was president of the Boys' Literary society, besides bearing the title of chairman of the Interscholastic Debating league. Although but 17 years old he has a good physique and a penchant for work, which prompted him at once to begin to build his fortune.

He went to work in the offices of his father. There he was dissatisfied. Everybody made it easy for him, he says, because he was "the son of the boss."

So he decided to make a change. He wished to learn the railroad business from the very bottom rung, but if he took charge of the car he was one of his father's lines, he figured, it would be the same old story.

The intramural railway at the world's fair offered him the opportunity he wanted. On that line he could take his job like any other man and be bossed by even "Bill," if his work was not satisfactory. So he applied for the position. His familiarity with cars stood him in good stead when it came to a test of his ability to run a car, and resulted in his being awarded one of the first cars that toured the exposition grounds.

Young Haynes intends to stick to his position throughout the exposition season, when, it is said, his father will have been fully convinced of his worth as a railroad man, and may then give him a position to further test his mettle.

FINDS HER MOTHER.

Father's Confession to Stolen Child Rights Wrong of 18 Years Ago.

IOWA FALLS, IA., June 25.—Abducted when 8 years old and finally finding her mother in this country, is the strange life story of Miss Ethel Jones, now visiting her mother at Ackley, from which place she was abducted by the father years ago.

Years ago there lived at Ackley a family by the name of Jones. Domestic troubles arose, and in a fit of anger the father and husband left home, his whereabouts for a long time being a mystery. Left alone, the mother undertook the duty of rearing her family.

Unknown to anyone in the town, the father returned one day and stealing the 5-year-old daughter, as mysteriously disappeared.

It remained for a death-bed confession to right the wrong done to the family, and far away on the Pacific coast, the father, realizing that his final end was near, confessed to his grown daughter that years ago he had stolen her from her mother. The daughter had grown to womanhood, the secret of her mother's identity being closely guarded by the father.

The daughter finally married and when the death bed forced from the lips of the father the secret of her early life, she undertook to learn, if possible, the whereabouts of the mother, faintly remembered, with happy results.

Superstitious.

Edyth—Would you decline an offer of marriage made on a Friday?

Mayme—No, indeed! I should consider it unlucky to let such a chance go by.—Chicago News.

UNITED STATES CRUISER SEEKS LOST PACIFIC ISLE

Sloop of War Levant Disappeared Forty-Four Years Ago and Crew May Still Survive—Leper Tells Story of Finding Speck of Land.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Saturday.—Seldom has a United States war vessel been sent on a more romantic errand than that which has fallen to the lot of the cruiser Tacoma. In response to orders from Washington, the Tacoma left Honolulu three weeks ago to find an island in the Pacific, the discovery of which was primarily due to the whim of a pretty dancing girl and which has defied rediscovery ever since.

The Tacoma's mission, however, is not one of exploration, but of rescue. It is thought there is a possibility of finding on the island some American naval officers and bluejackets who have been lost to the world for 44 years.

The men whom it is hoped to rescue were of the crew of the sloop of war Levant, which in August, 1860, sailed from Hilo, never to be heard of again. She carried 150 men and was in charge of Commander C. B. S. Porter, one of the ablest seamen in the navy. That the navy department, after the lapse of nearly half a century, has sent out an expedition in search of these men is owing to the devotion of a friend of Commander Porter, now a resident of Honolulu, who has never lost hope that the commander may be alive and has never ceased to petition for a rescuing party.

Previous to her disappearance from the seas the Levant had an interesting history. She was originally a British man-of-war and was captured in the war of 1812 with another British ship by the gallant old Constitution after a fierce fight off the Madeira islands. As an American ship the Levant took part in the bombardment of Pacific ports in the Mexican war and later participated in fights with Chinese forts during the opium troubles.

Not the least interesting thing in connection with her history is the fact that Edward Everett Hale made use of her strange fate to end the career of his fictional hero, Philip Nolan, "The Man Without a Country."

The island upon which it is hoped to find survivors of the Levant's crew is known as Degreaves and is supposed to be between the 133d and the 137th degrees of north latitude. It was discovered in 1859 by Capt. Degreaves, who is now a leper in the colony of Molokai, Hawaii. Before the Tacoma left in search of the island Capt. Degreaves was asked to tell the circumstances of his discovery.

Whim of French Dancer.

He said that while in Melbourne in 1859 he shipped as mate on the schooner General Wolford, which had been chartered by Lola Montez, a famous dancer and singer, who had just completed a tour of the Australian cities. She was accompanied by her manager and the members of her troupe, and wished to make a pleasure trip to Hawaii before going to Peru.

"We are taking the reckoning about 9 o'clock one morning," said Capt. Degreaves, "when suddenly two small peaks were seen about four and a half miles due east of us. I knew in an instant that we had discovered a new island, for it was uncharted. We stood to the leeward of the island, and I was rowed ashore and made an examination of the place.

"The island was marvelously rich in guano. It seemed to be covered with the guano birds. You had to take a stick and knock them out of the way to avoid treading on them.

"On my return to the schooner Lola Montez and her party seemed delighted with the idea of having discovered a new island in the Pacific and they went ashore and had luncheon. They made a big celebration and christened the place Degreaves island, in honor of myself.

"The party caught fish and amused themselves for two days, while I did considerable exploring.

"The exact location of the island was taken. The weather was perfect and both the longitude and latitude were correctly measured and noted. Unfortunately I lost my notes and the discovery was made so long ago that the figures have escaped my mind, but I am sure the island is between the 135th and 137th degrees of west longitude and the 16th and 17th degrees of north latitude."

After his voyage on the Wolford Capt. Degreaves, who is a native of the Island of Jersey, lived many years in the Fiji islands. In 1878 he went to Honolulu and remained a resident until a few years ago, when he was stricken with leprosy. He interested capitalists in the island he had discovered and expeditions were sent out from Honolulu and San Francisco to find it, but none was successful.

Search Made for It.

In 1899 the United States hydrographic department became interested in the island, and at its instigation the Albatross made a brief search for it. Soundings were taken along the 136th degree of west longitude at intervals of about five miles. A depth of 2,766 to 3,088 fathoms was found, and no traces of the island or indications of its existence were obtained.

In March, 1902, however, Capt. William Lawless, master of the mail steamer Australia, running between San Francisco and Tahiti, saw two patches of discolored water about 100 feet square in 18 deg. 56 min. north latitude and 136 deg. 10 min. west longitude. There was a heavy sea running at the time and Capt. Lawless did not stop to investigate the spots, but he believes they were croppings from Degreaves island.

Capt. B. F. Chapman, formerly a resident of Tahiti and now of Honolulu, who was a ship captain in the coast-Tahiti trade many years, believes in these sunken rocks or islands. He said:

"As far back as 1850 a low land was discovered by the bark Du Mont de Ville on a voyage from San Francisco to Tahiti, but I do not think it has ever been seen since. Capt. Reade of the Oceanic steamship Mariposa, one of his San Francisco-Tahiti voyages, sighted a shoal which is not on the charts. From the presence of birds about the vessels his discovery indicated that an island must have been somewhere in the vicinity.

Once Marked on Chart.

"When I was a sea captain my chart had a notation to the effect that a 'cluster of five islands hereabouts' was to be watched for. The chart gave them somewhere between 16 and 17 south latitude and from 130 to 135 west longitude. The queer thing about these islands, or this island, is that some one apparently gets a glimpse of it and then afterward no one can locate it.

"There is a group of sunken islands between Honolulu and San Francisco, however, which it would be well worth the government's time and money to locate. The location should be put on the charts, for I believe that in the winter gales many vessels which have mysteriously disappeared have run upon these sunken peaks and gone to the bottom.

"One of these rocks is three fathoms from the surface and the next peak is five fathoms. They are difficult to locate, for the water does not always break over them.

"The sunken rock is known to me as Redit's rock, named after a vessel which discovered it, and which flew the Tahitian flag.

"One of the crew in that boat was Tom Briggs, who is still living in Papeete. The last time I was in Tahiti I invited Tom to dine with me and asked him about the sunken rock. He told me that they saw the breakers and hove to, sending out a small boat to make soundings. He was in the boat. To my best memory he states that the rock is in longitude 137 and latitude 37.20, or near the Farallones.

"Another ship's captain saw the same breakers in later years, but despite the efforts of a man-of-war and other vessels to locate the rock it has not been seen lately. It is like throwing a needle on a lawn and sending a child out to find it.

"This rock or group of rocks is probably between eight and nine hundred miles west of San Francisco. For many years a notation appeared on the charts regarding the sunken rock with the word 'doubtful' attached. Nowadays no reference is made to it upon the charts.

"There are other islands in the small general sailing vessel track which have been lost. Copper and Henderson islands are the name of them. I once sent out a vessel to find Henderson island, as it was supposed to be a guano island. It was not located."

CHEMICAL WORK BY ELECTRICITY

Professor More of John Hopkins University Solves a Great Problem.

EVEN AND CONSTANT HEAT

BALTIMORE, MD., June 25.—Prof. Harmon V. Morse, professor of analytical chemistry at Johns Hopkins university and adjunct director of the chemical laboratory, has perfected an electric furnace which, it is believed, will revolutionize practical laboratory work in chemistry. The furnace is the result of long and hard work on the part of Prof. Morse, and his invention is one of the important scientific achievements of the year.

Prof. Morse's furnace was shown before the chemical seminary at a recent meeting at the university. He and his young assistant, Dr. J. C. W. Frazer, were congratulated by President Remsen and the scientific faculty, to whom he spoke for an hour about the apparatus.

Heretofore gas has been the only source of heat for experimental work in the chemical laboratory. For a long time scientists have been trying to devise some sort of economical electric heater. That satisfactory results may be obtained in the heating necessary in laboratory practice four conditions must be satisfied: (1) The heat must be developed economically; (2) It must be possible to obtain definite temperatures; (3) It must be possible to maintain constant temperatures for long periods; (4) Products of combustion must not be allowed to come in contact with the substances heated.

Chemists have long seen that the solution of this problem was to be found in the electric current, which yields no products of combustion, and can be developed at a constant and regular rate. Thus far, however, no one has been able to make it a practical substitute for gas.

Prof. Morse's electric heater comprises, first, an ordinary copper oven incased in a box, doubly lined with asbestos, with an air space between, the whole covered with aluminum paint, which is not affected by high temperatures, is a very poor heat radiator and preserves the asbestos from shredding. This arrangement practically prevents any loss of heat by radiation.

The source of heat is in the stove placed within the copper oven. The stove is constructed of parallel slabs of soapstone coated with graphite, the soapstone being unaffected by heat. The graphite is evenly distributed over the slabs of soapstone, that the heat may be developed uniformly over the surface. The use of soapstone in constructing the heater is the key to the apparatus.

The electric furnace has been found to work admirably, and can be operated at a cost of less than one cent a day. A constant temperature of 150 degrees can be obtained for eight hours a day at a cost of three-fourths of a cent. It is probable that Prof. Morse's furnace will displace the old gas furnaces now in general use, and it is certain that it will add much to the exactness with which chemical processes may be carried out.

Silent Meditation.

"A blue shirtwaist suit would be just the thing for me," Mrs. Percy Vere continued. "Of course I could get that brown one, but few women look well in brown"—

"My dear," interrupted her husband, who was weary of her chatter about dress, "the one thing I'd like most to see you in is brown."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, a 'brown study.'"—Catholic Standard.

PITCHBLENDE IN PHOTOGRAPHY

Minneapolis Man Tried Interesting Experiment With Radio-active Ore.

RESULT IS A SHADOWGRAPH

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 25.—An interesting experiment has been made with active radio ore by a local photographer. A photograph was made from the light emitted by the ore, in a closed box, which excluded all other light. The resulting "shadowgraph" is similar to those made with the X-ray and proves the strength of the light rays emitted by the ore.

The ore was brought to the city by E. P. Townsend of Collinwood, who recently returned home after several years spent in Northern Colorado. The region is, so far as is known, the only place in the United States where radio-active ore exists. It is found in two mines—the Wood mine of which Mr. Townsend was formerly one of the lessees, and the Kirk mine. Both lie in Leavenworth gulch, in Gilpin county, about 50 miles northwest of Denver.

The ore from which the photograph was made is pitchblende, containing 55 per cent uranium. This ore is worth $350 a pound. The ore holds considerable copper and other minerals, with a trace of gold. Radium is generally found in uranium bearing ore. It is only within a few months, however, that the presence of radium in the ore from these mines was demonstrated by the investigations of a professor of the University of Colorado. Thus far no attempt has been made to extract the radium, but the companies operating the two mines plan to do so. The radium salts can be extracted without impairing the value of the ore for the extraction of other constituents.

The photographer who made the radium picture experimented several days in his efforts to obtain a good photograph. He first made the mistake of underestimating the amount of light emitted by the ore and gave the plate too long an exposure. This was a natural mistake, as the light from the pitchblende is not visible to the naked eye, even in the dark. The photograph made was given 48 hours' exposure, and this was evidently too long for perfect results. In taking the photograph he laid a key and two coins on a dry plate and then upon these a piece of uranium four inches long, two inches wide and a little more than an inch thick, weighing one and one-fourth pounds. He tried the experiment of printing from the negative by means of radium light, used as natural light, but found that the rays passed through the film and left no impression, acting similarly to X-rays.

"I'll never marry," said Miss Passay, with emphasis.

"Perhaps not," replied Miss Snapp, "but you certainly have put up a gallant fight."—Philadelphia Ledger.

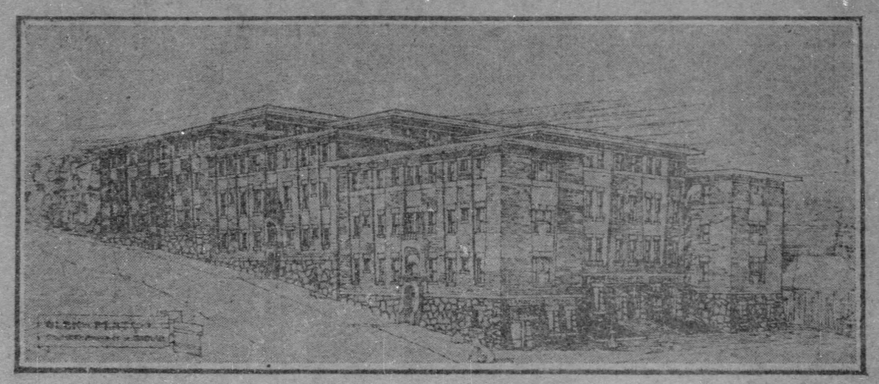
THE LARGEST TENEMENT IN PITTSBURGH



Glenn Flats in Twenty-Third Ward.

The latest evidence that the model tenement house idea is taking fast hold upon Pittsburgh investors is the project of Architect Titus de Bobula to build the Glenn flats at Elizabeth and Sydenham streets in the Twenty-third ward. The building will be he largest and best equipped tenement in the city. It will be three stories high above the basement and its dimensions will be 150x110 feet. The walls will be of brick, tastefully decorated, and the building will be strictly fireproof. In all particulars it will conform perfectly to the new tenement house law, having a large open space around it and the best of sanitary arrangements. There will be 282 rooms in the building, arranged in suites of from two to four rooms. These will rent for from $12 to $15 a month. Since the extensive improvements of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company in Glenwood have forced hundreds of families out of their former homes, there has been a great demand for dwellings of this sort for the use of the railroad employes. Bodine & Co. have been awarded the contract for the Glenn flats, which will cost approximately $52,000.

MYSTERY IN THIS GIRL'S SUICIDE

No One Can Tell Why Miss Lillian O'Reilly of Greenpoint Shot Herself.

WAS IN HER FRIEND'S HOUSE

Found Pistol in Dining Room, Held It to Her Temple With a Laugh and Fired. Probably Thought It Wasn't Loaded and Did It for Effect.

NEW YORK, June 25.—Her friends are at loss to account for the motive which impelled Miss Lillian O'Reilly, 21 years old, of 106 Norman avenue, Greenpoint, a devout member of St. Anthony's Catholic church, to kill herself yesterday afternoon to make purchases for the afternoon at the home of Mrs. Jennie Wolff, of 265 Eckford street. Mrs. Wolff is a bride of three months and Miss O'Reilly was a bridesmaid at her wedding.

They were inseparable friends, and after Mrs. Wolff's marriage Miss O'Reilly never allowed a day to pass without calling on her. She left her home yesterday Sunday dinner and to visit Mrs. Wolff. In the dining room of the Wolff home her attention was drawn to Mr. Wolff's pistol, which lay on the sideboard.

She picked up the weapon,, and as she did so Mrs. Wolff warned her that it contained a loaded cartridge and four empty ones.

"I guess I'll have my Fourth of July now," said Miss O'Reilly with a laugh as she walked to the kitchen window with the pistol. She snapped the trigger four times and then, turning around so that Mrs. Wolff could see her, held the pistol to her right temple. Again Mrs. Wolff warned her. Scarcely had she ceased speaking when the pistol was discharged and Miss O'Reilly fell to the floor

Mrs. Wolff swooned and fell across the body of her friend. Neighbors who heard the report hurried into the Wolff home. An ambulance from St. Catherine's hospital was summoned, but Miss O'Reilly was dead before the surgeon reached her.

Daniel O'Reilly, father of the girl, says that she had no love affair or home trouble to cause her to take her life. Mrs. Wolff said she believed Miss O'Reilly was trying to frighten her and had no intention of killing herself.

MOST OF INSANE ARE BRUNETS

Comparatively Few Light-Haired Persons, According to Records Lose Their Minds.

ONE BIG POINT FOR BLONDES

Only 3 Per Cent of Total in One State Had Light Hair, and But 2 Per Cent Blue Eyes—Curious Figures Are Reported as Official.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 25.—"I happened across a pamphlet several months ago published by a southern state, in which were some interesting statistics regarding the complexion of the inmates of the state insane asylum," Hobart Langdon said. "Only 3 per cent of the total had light hair and only 2 per cent blue eyes.

"It struck me as a rather curious fact that dark haired and dark eyed people should so largely predominate among the insane, but the matter of latitude might play some part in this, I thought, for naturally there were more dark than light haired persons in that section.

"Just as a matter of curiosity, however, I wrote to several more asylum authorities in other parts of the country to see what the ratio of light haired inmates was to those who were dark. I expected to find the percentage increase in communities where the total of light haired was larger, but in this I was mistaken, so I am led to infer from the statistics that there is a greater possibility for insanity among dark haired than among light haired persons.

"My figures were obtained from 68 asylums, located in nearly every state in the union, and a few in Canada and England. The number of patients in these institutions was 16,512, of whom 709 had light hair and only 361 red or auburn locks. In other words, 96 per cent of the inmates were brunets, with black or brown hair, the latter in varying shades. In one asylum in New England there was not a single inmate that was not a brunet.

"Of course, I do not know how to account for this, for I am not a specialist in such matters, and only obtained the statistics out of pure curiosity, but it certainly looks as if blondes were less liable to insanity than those with darker hair or eyes.

"Another peculiar feature about the facts I obtained, however, was that the percentage of those regarded as incurably insane was much greater among the blondes than among the brunets. The totals show that among the dark haired inmates only 55 per cent were marked hopelessly insane, while among the blondes 81 per cent were put in this category, and that only three among the red haired patients escaped the same classification."

RADIO VIBRATOR LATE INVENTION

New Scientific Theories Embraced Which May Revolutionize Medical Practice.

CLAIMS OF THE INVENTOR

W. F. Bleeker Declares His Apparatus Will Prove a Great Restorer of Health to Diseased Persons—Has Worked on Idea for Seven Years.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., June 25.—An invention which, it is asserted, may revolutionize medical science and throw into insignificance such discoveries as radium and the X-ray, has been brought to completion in the laboratories of the state university by Warren F. Bleeker, formerly instructor of chemistry in the University of Colorado.

For years Mr. Bleeker has worked on his invention which he calls the radio vibrator. For the last three months he has worked in the laboratory of Prof. Hubert C. Carel, professor of chemistry at the university.

The instrument is based on the theory that the elements of the human body, when the body is in perfect health, vibrate in perfect harmony. When the body is in a diseased condition this normal tone is destroyed. By the therapeutical application of the radio vibrator, it is claimed, the deranged tone of the body may be restored to a normal condition. The inventor does not claim for his instrument all curative power, but by actual trials remarkable results are said to have been accomplished in curing nervous diseases.

The radio vibrator is a small, nickel-plated metal box about four inches long, three inches wide and one inch in thickness. From one end two wires about four feet long extend. These wires terminate in small circular disks which are applied to the affected parts of the body. The box contains a mysterious compound of chemicals known only to Mr. Bleeker and his assistants. The vibrations of the chemicals within the box are transmitted by means of the wires and disks to the human body. As soon as applied the action of the chemicals within the box is calculated to cause sympathetic normal vibrations in the diseased body, thus restoring the patient to health.

Speaking of the invention of Mr. Bleeker, Prof. Carel said:

"The invention involves just four things—first, the scientific theory that the normal tone of the human body is caused by the vibration of the elements composing it; second, the mathematical deduction and determination of what chemical elements are to be used and in what proportion, and this may vary according to the temperament of each person; third, the preparation for each individual cause of the instrument, and, fourth, the therapeutic application of the instrument."

WIFE CLUNG TO CONVICT MATE

Refused to Be Reconciled to Wealthy Father and Became Servant Near Penitentiary.

MAN HAS JUST BEEN FREED

Forgery of a Check While He Was Intoxicated Sent Him to Prison Three Years Ago—An Indiana Romance in Real Life.

JEFFERSONVILLE, IND., June 25.—It was a happy woman who greeted Melvin Beavers on his release from the Indiana reformatory last week.

Before their marriage, nine years ago, Melvin Beavers was addicted to the liquor habit. William Browning, a wealthy farmer at Heltonville, eight miles east of Bedford, objected to his attentions to his stepdaughter, Miss Maggie Hunter, and gave orders that they break the engagement.

Miss Hunter refused to obey the dictates of her stepfather, but, instead, saw more of Beavers than ever, and they were married the day before her 16th birthday.

So great was her influence over her husband that she obtained from him a promise to refrain from further use of intoxicants. The promise was kept for six years. With the breaking off of the drink habit he entered the lumber business and was doing well.

But one day, three years ago, Beavers had been out buying lumber and had become chilled from exposure. He yielded to the temptation to take a drink of whisky and this called for more, until he became intoxicated. In this state he forged the name of his brother to a check for $8 and passed it on a saloonkeeper. The brother later made the amount good, but prosecution was started and Beavers was sentenced to serve from two to 21 years in the Indiana penitentiary.

After sentence was pronounced Mr. Browning offered to permit his stepdaughter to return to her comfortable home provided she would give up her convict husband, but she declined and took employment as a domestic with a family at Bedford. She remained at Bedford about one year, and then went to Terre Haute, where she remained another year, when she learned that her husband would be paroled as is customary at the expiration of the minimum sentence. She gathered her scant savings and came to Jeffersonville to meet her husband when he should be released. Disappointment awaited her, for when she arrived in this city she learned that for some infraction of the rules her husband would not be released until the expiration of another year.

Disheartened but not discouraged, Mrs. Beavers decided to take up her abode in this city. She obtained employment as a domestic and has since lived in happy anticipation of the time when her husband was freed. Since her stay in Jeffersonville she has seen her husband but once, and then in the presence of a guard.

DESIRES TO KILL FATHER.

Young Man Wanted to Put Him Out of Pain to Save His Mother's Life.

CRAWFORD, ARK., June 25.—John Wright, a young farmer living near Arcadia, accompanied by a younger brother, called on the sheriff and asked permission to administer chloroform to his aged father, who is dying from cancer on the tongue.

"My father is a living skeleton and the doctor tells us there is no hope for a cure," said young Wright. "He does not weigh 50 pounds with his clothes on, although he once weighed at least four times that amount. My mother is dying from grief over father's condition. He cannot talk, but has asked us by signs to be relieved from his suffering with chloroform."

Never having been asked to pass on such a case, Sheriff Tompkins was at a loss as to how to advise the young man, and with his younger brother, Wright returned to Arcadia heartbroken for fear the suffering of his father might cause him to lose his mother also. The family came to Arkansas from a small German village 10 years ago.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh or Deafness, send a 2c stamp to Pretzinger Bros., Chemists, Dayton, Ohio, and they will mail you a sample of Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm, which has been proven by thousands to be the only immediate specific cure for all forms of Catarrh and its kindred affliction—deafness. Easily applied—gives instant relief, and you'll thank us for the advice. For sale by druggists. If not, a full sized jar will be sent prepaid on receipt of 50c. But send for the sample first. That'll prove the claims of Pretzinger's Catarrh Balm.

"After using your sample box of catarrh balm, I found it just as recommended. I have now used two jars and can truthfully say that it has cured me. Before using the Balm, I tried many kinds of medicines, also three different physicians, with little or no benefit. I find that your Balm cures headache almost instantly and sore throat quickly." WHAT MYSTERIOUS POWER DOES THIS MAN POSSESS?

THE DEAD BROUGHT BACK TO LIFE

Would Hardly Create a Greater Sensation than Some of the Miraculous Cures He Performs with a Strange Mystic Fluid Unknown to Medical Science

DOCTORS FACED WITH FACTS FAIL TO EXPLAIN SECRET OF HIS MARVELOUS POWER OVER DEATH

Heals Those Hundreds of Miles Away the Same as Those Who Call in Person

Gives Services and Home Treatment Without Pay to Prove to All Mankind the Marvels of His Power—Feels It His Duty to God and Man to Give Freely of His Knowledge and Skill to All Who Stand in Need

(From the Baltimore World.)

New York (Special Correspondence)—Dr. Wallace Hadley, a well-known professor of chemistry of this city, has undoubtedly made the most sensational discovery of the age. Call it Divine power, science, or whatever you will, the fact remains that he has transcended all known methods of healing, set at defiance the supposed laws of nature, and utterly dumfounded the ill and afflicted by a series of the most miraculous cures known to medical science. Hopeless invalids, given up as utterly incurable by eminent physicians, have been healed of their afflictions and rescued from the indescribable anguish of an untimely grave by the mighty power over disease and death. The remedies of the best and most learned specialists seem as bread pills when compared with the remarkable discovery of this wonderful man. He has already done practically everything but bring the dead to life, and his associates are on the qui vive not knowing what marvel he may next perform.

"How did you happen to make this great discovery?" asked a reporter, who called to find out the secret of the tremendous furore Dr. Hadley had created.

"For since I graduated from the medical department of the University of Buffalo," said the doctor, "I have been convinced that no disease should cause death. God has, in my judgment, provided a cure for every ill to which human flesh is heir. Man must search and find this cure the same as mine has discovered the telegraph, the telephone, etc. The first thing I set out to do was to find the exact elements which control living being and sustain life, to discover the power which makes a man's heart beat and his body live. I next determined to extract these products from animal, mineral and chemical substances and combine them as they are found in a living being. I worked for years, day and night, before I made any great progress. Then my discovery nearly all came at once. As soon as I made it I tried the preparation on myself, then I gave it to all the sick people I could find. I called for the worst cases doctors could send me, cases supposed to be incurable. The results were simply miraculous. They far exceeded my most sanguine hopes. I particularly remember the case of Mrs. Sarah Miller, No. 1507 Sixth street, Harrisburg, Pa. She was one of my first patients. The doctors had given her up to die. Her friends hourly expected to be called to her grave. She was so bad the night she received my treatment she did not expect to live until morning. She took two doses of my wonderful extract; she slept; she is living today. Here is a copy of a letter from her. Read for yourself." The following extract is taken verbatim from Mrs. Miller's letter. She says: "When I began to take your treatment I realized that I was on the brink of the grave. I suffered from gastro-intestinal catarrh and diabetes. I was in constant pain day and night. I felt blue, despondent and discouraged with life. I had taken so much medicine for so many years without receiving any benefit. I tried your treatment as a last resort, and thank God I took it, for I should not be here to write this letter." "This is only one of a large number of similar letters that I have received," said the doctor. "It seems that sometimes a divine hand directed these poor sufferers where to obtain relief. I believe that I was permitted to make this great discovery for the benefit of the world. Hence I offer my services free for a limited time that all may enjoy the benefits of perfect health. Here is a letter from another woman whom I saved from the grave. Mrs. Germond, of No. 302 Highland avenue, Benton Springs, Mich., writes: 'I tried so many remedies without obtaining relief that I had given up all hope of ever being cured. I heard of your wonderful discovery, but I had no faith in you and was induced to give you a trial only on account of a strong letter received from a friend who had been cured by you. I was a physical wreck ready for the grave. I had heart, stomach and bronchial trouble. My whole system was diseased and run down. I suffered untold agonies. I often felt that death would be a welcome relief. I am confident that you saved my life, and had it not been for your marvelous treatment, I should today be cold in my grave. I write this letter for the good of humanity, that others may be induced to try the wonderful treatment that has cured me.'

"Do physicians take your treatment?" asked the reporter.

"They certainly do," said the doctor. "I am treating a large number now. Of course they would not want you to publish their names, but here are their letters. You can read what they say. I cure them when all their own remedies fail. I have demonstrated beyond doubt that the most serious diseases can be overcome. That the lives of thousands of men and women can be saved who heretofore have been carried off to the grave. I estimate that I shall save the lives of over 100,000 people the coming year who otherwise would have died an untimely death."

"But how do you account for your wonderful power over death?" asked the reporter.

"Step this way," said the doctor, leading the reporter into his large laboratory, "and I will show you the source of my power. I will explain to you the secret for which wise men have sought for ages." The doctor here pointed to a curious fluid extract in a tightly corked glass flagon. "This," said the doctor, "is the apparently simple xtract that has startled the civilized world. This is the powerful essence that has given me the titles 'Divine Healer' 'Miracle Worker,' 'A Latter Day Savior,' etc. Of course, I am nothing of the sort. I am a scientist. My discovery is scientific. I abstract life from the materials of nature. Did you ever stop to think that wheat and corn come from the earth and air? If we knew the wonderful chemical secrets of nature, we could make corn, wheat, and other food from the earth and air. So my discovery of the vital principle of life is not so wonderful after all. I have merely found a secret law of nature, which has been overlooked by doctors and scientists for centuries past.'

"Do you give treatment to everyone free? This, it seems, would be an enormous expense," said the reporter.

"Yes," said the doctor, "I offer a course of home treatment to everyone who writes me now absolutely free of charge. Later I expect to charge a moderate fee. It will probably cost me several thousand dollars to give this free help, but I can afford to do it; and besides, I want to prove the miraculous power of my great discovery. Tell your readers to state the leading symptoms of their trouble, giving age and sex, and I will diagnose their cases, write them fully in regard to the exact stage to which their disease has progressed, the length of time required to effect a cure, and send them a course of home treatment for their particular disease."

The writer has taken Dr. Hadley's course of home treatment himself for a nervous affection, and he can personally vouch for its wonderful efficacy. He also guarantees this offer to be absolutely genuine in every respect. All who wish to be healed should write Dr. Hadley at his laboratory. Address Dr. Wallace Hadley, office 1052 D, Force of Life building, 708 Madison avenue, New York city. If you have anything confidential to say mark your letter private. The doctor is an extremely affable man and takes a supreme delight in curing difficult cases that have been given up to die by other physicians. It is these cases that offer him the opportunity to demonstrate the miraculous power of his great discovery.

KAISER RECEIVES UNCLE EDWARD

German and English Rulers Greet Each Other Heartily at Kiel.

EXCHANGE VISITS ON YACHTS

Monarchs Embrace and Kiss Each Other. Dense Crowds Wait Through Long Rains to Witness Meeting—High Dignitaries at Dinner.

[Associated Press Cable to The Gazette.]

KIEL, June 25.—The royal yacht Victoria and Albert, with King Edward on board, entered the Holtenau lock, at the mouth of the Baltic canal shortly after 3 o'clock this afternoon amid salutes from the assembled German warships. Emperor William, who was accompanied by Prince Henry of Prussia, Crown Prince Frederick William and a brilliant suite, awaited his uncle here. The meeting between the two sovereigns was most hearty.

Long prior to the meeting of the monarchs dense crowds of people thronged the banks of the lock and waited hours in the drenching rain for a glimpse of the royal personages. Some diversion was afforded by the arrival of a guard of honor from the first marine artillery and a bodyguard from the first regiment of the guards, the latter in their historic metal caps.

In their ranks stood three of the emperor's sons, Eitel Friedrich, his second son; Oscar, his fifth son, and little Joachim, the latter about four feet high, looking like a Lilliputian beside the tall, fine men by his side. The guard of honor and the bodyguard had hardly taken up their appointed positions when Emperor William, in the uniform of a British admiral, and wearing the ribbon of the Order of the Bath, arrived and inspected them. Shortly thereafter the Victoria and Albert hove in sight, escorted by British cruisers and a squadron of German cavalry, who had trotted along the side of the royal yacht the whole length of the canal.

King Edward, wearing the uniform of a German admiral, and having across his breast the ribbon of the Order of the Black Eagle, was on the deck of the Victoria and Albert with a large retinue. Immediately after the gangway had been laid Emperor William boarded the British yacht and greeted his uncle in the heartiest manner, kissing him several times on both cheeks.

After greetings between King Edward and Prince Henry of Prussia and the crown prince, the king landed, witnessed a march of part of the guards and returned to his yacht, which afterward entered Kiel harbor. All the warships, yachts and other vessels in the harbor dressed ship and the shore batteries and warships fired a salute.

After the Victoria and Albert had moored at Kiel the two monarchs boarded the imperial yacht Hohenzollern, where King Edward was received by the empress and had presented to him the royal entourage.

The weather had at this time improved. The rain, which sent the drenched spectators scurrying toward Kiel through the mud, after the arrival of the Victoria and Albert at the canal lock and the meeting of their majesties, ceased. Consequently the reception by the king on the deck of the Hohenzollern of the high military and naval officials was held under better auspices.

Late this afternoon King Edward landed to pay a visit to Prince Henry at the castle, where his majesty also took tea. There was a gala dinner at 8 o'clock tonight on the Hohenzollern, which was attended by King Edward and members of the royal family, a large company of high dignitaries of state and military and naval officers.

The banquet on the Hohenzollern was held on the upper deck. Emperor William, in proposing a toast to King Edward, said:

"It is a great satisfaction to me to address your royal and imperial majesty for the first time on board a German warship. Choosing your way by sea, your majesty comes to German shores as the ruler of a great empire, encompassing the world through the sea, and most kindly willing to participate in German yatching. Your majesty was greeted by the thunder of the guns of the German fleet, which is glad to see its honorary admiral.

"It is the youngest creation among fleets in the world and an expression of the reviving sea activity of the German empire, regenerated by the great emperor of undying memory. It is intended for the protection of trade and territory and it also serves, like the German army, for the maintenance of peace, which the German empire has kept over 30 years and which Europe has preserved with it. It is known to every one by your majesty's words and influence that your majesty's whole endeavors are directed to this very end—the preservation of peace—as I, too, am ever devoted to the wish that all might attain this end. May God lend success to our efforts.

"In unfading remembrance of the memorable hours spent together at Osborne at the deathbed of the great monarch of the world empire, now ruled by your majesty, I empty my glass to the health of your majesty—I drink the health of his majesty, the king of Great Britain and Ireland and emperor of India."

King Edward replied as follows: "In offering your imperial and royal majesty the sincerest thanks for the exceedingly kind words in which your majesty has drunk my health, I esteem myself happy to have the opportunity to express the deepest gratitude for the brilliant reception your majesty has prepared for me, and I am especially glad that it has been possible for me to visit your majesty at a time of the year when I usually am most occupied by engagements at home. But the part which I have for many years taken in yachting exercised too great an attraction for me not to take the opportunity of chancing myself of your majesty's success in gaining over so many devotees in Germany to this sport. With this was coupled the wish to knit, if possible, more closely by renewed personal intercourse the intimate relations of kinship which have so long connected our houses.

"Your majesty's appreciative reference to my unremitting endeavors for the maintenance of peace deeply touch me, and I am happy in the certainty that your majesty has the same object in view. May our two flags float side by side to the remotest ages, even as today, for the maintenance of peace and the welfare not only of our own countries but also of all other nations.

"I am proud to belong to your majesty's fleet as honorary admiral, even as my fleet esteems it a high honor that your majesty wears the British naval uniform given your majesty by my never to be forgotten mother, whose memory is equally sacred to us both.

"I raise by glass to the health of your majesty. Long live his majesty, the German emperor and king of Prussia and her majesty, the empress queen. Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah."

A salute from the warships accompanied the emperor's toast.

When the king left the Hohenzollern shortly after 10 o'clock a signal rocket was fired and all the warships burst into a blaze of light. Many small craft were illuminated and some, displaying "God Save the King" in electric lights, traversed the harbor, where launches from the warships performed a series of evolutions.

Crowds on shore watched the brilliant spectacle despite an uncomfortable rain.

NEW WEATHER OFFICES ARE BEING IMPROVED

Col. Frank Ridgway, the Forecast Official, Tells of the Advantages the Skyscraping Location Possesses to the Service.

In his sumptuous offices on the twenty-fourth floor of the Farmers Bank building, Col. Frank Ridgway, the local forecast official of the United States weather bureau, surveyed the three rivers, watched an afternoon shower traveling up the Ohio and pronounced it good. Col. Ridgway is satisfied with life. He has secured through the personal interest of Prof. Willis L. Moore, the chief of the bureau, the location for the weather offices which he has so long desired and has been trying to secure ever since the Farmers' building was started.

"We are about as high as Mt. Washington here," said Col. Ridgway yesterday. "The building is 325 feet high and that gives us an elevation of 1046 feet above mean tide level at Sandy Hook. It gives us a far better opportunity to secure accurate records. For instance, the wind guages here show the true velocity of the wind far better than they could when placed on top of the Federal building. There were many obstacles in the path of the wind there. Its direction was not told accurately and its velocity was interfered with. We have placed the instruments here on a 16-foot pole on top of the building. If this proves to be interfered with by a whirl caused by the wind rushing up the sides of the building, we will built a 40-foot steel tower, which will be high enough to escape that interference.

"Our temperature records are better, also, as they are removed from the influence of artificial factors, such as the reflection from the street and other buildings. The true heat is given here.

"One thing of great value here is the view from the office of all the rivers in case of floods. I can see the piers on both the Sixth street and the Smithfield street bridges and unless an automatic guage recording here in the office, is placed in the rivers, I shall have a guage painted on the piers so that it can be read with a field glass from the office. There is in use on the Mississippi an electric guage and it may be that such an instrument will be secured for Pittsburgh.

The weather bureau in Pittsburgh is now in its twenty-fourth year. It was started November 10, 1870, under the charge of Sergeant James West when the weather service was a part of the work of the United States signal corps. The original office was in the Phelan block in Fifth avenue. The office was moved around to various places, including one in Grant street, then to the old St. Clair, now the Anderson hotel; to the First National Bank building, and finally, in 1892, to the Federal building. When the service was made a bureau of the department of agriculture in 1891, O. D. Stewart became the first "local forecast official in Pittsburgh. June 20, 1896, Col. Ridgway succeeded him and has remained in charge since.

The service has been of great usefulness here in many cases, particularly in time of floods as well as serving a daily use in it sforecasts. The interest of Prof. Moore in the local work has been pronounced and on his several visits here their appreciation of the service has been shown to Prof. Moore by some of the city's best known citizens.

William Dexter, aged 20, died at the home of his mother, Mrs. Margaret Dexter, New Town, near Turtle Creek, yesterday. Mr. Dexter was employed in the Westinghouse Electric works.

Mrs. Martha C. Glover, aged 65, wife of Cornelius Glover, died yesterday at Beaver Falls, Pa. She is survived by her husband and three children, William F. of New Castle, Mrs. R. P. Gaston of Buffalo, N. Y., and Milton R., at home.

Clement Scott, the dramatic critic, died in London yesterday, after a prolonged illness. A matinee was given at His Majesty's theater Thursday for Scott's benefit. The performance netted $6,250 for Mrs. Scott, who was in somewhat straightened circumstances.

The Hon. James A. McKenzie, former congressman from the Hopkinsville (Ky.) district, died yesterday. He was 64 years old and known everywhere as "Quinine Jim." Prominence came to Mr. McKenzie through his strenuous and successful championing of the bill of which he was the author, to take the tax off quinine.

Frank McManus died at West Elizabeth, Pa., Friday, aged 74. He was born in Ireland and upon coming to this country shortly before the civil war, enlisted as a private and was wounded. He is survived by his widow and the following children: William, J. E., Miss Mary McManus and Mrs. Jersey Blair, all living at West Elizabeth.

George Kuhn of Latrobe, Pa., is dead, aged 70. He was born in Derry and went to Latrobe 40 years ago. His widow and two sons—Charles and Thomas Kuhn, of Ligonier, and three daughters, Mary, Grace and Olive, survive him.

PERSONALS

L. J. Macheur of Berlin, Germany, passed through the city last evening on the southwest limited. He has been detailed to take charge of an exhibition at the world's fair for a German manufacturing firm. While the train was being made up for its western journey Mr. Macheur said: "The exhibition I am detailed to look after consists of cutlery. Everything mentionable in our line has been sent to this country for the exhibition. The imports of cutlery to the United States has increased slightly during the past two years. There is no steel in the United States that gives the service as that made in Germany. It is noticeable, however, that articles that were made exclusively in Germany a few years ago are now manufactured in this country. Business in Germany is very dull, but indications are it will pick up in the near future."

John Algeo of Canton spent yesterday in Pittsburgh and before leaving, said: "Our town is very quiet at present. The steel works, while they are not closed down, are working very little."

John F. Sweeny of the Home Trust Company, Gilliford B. Sweeny, Mrs. Sweeny and their daughter, Madeline, form a party who leave left for New York, from whence they will sail Tuesday for a two months' tour in Europe.

KISS OF MOTHER WORTH THOUSANDS

Johnstown Man's Theft Restored to Owner in Hope of Release.

SON HELD FOR GRAND LARCENY

Jewels Filched from Friends With Whom He Was Staying Concealed from Police in Jail for Four Weeks—Man's Appearance Attractive.

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

ST. LOUIS, June 25.—The police today discovered that R. W. Royal Donmeyer, a young dentist, whose home is in Johnstown, Pa., kept in his possession and secreted $5,000 worth of diamonds while he was being searched by policemen and detectives, kept them in his cell with him during four weeks of imprisonment and finally passed them to his mother by means of a kiss, when she was bidding him goodby in the jail.

The mother restored the diamonds to their owner in the hope of securing freedom from prosecution of her son, but in this she failed. Donmeyer is held under a warrant charging him with grand larceny.

Donmeyer is a young man of much more than usual attractiveness. Several weeks ago, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Hayes of 4850 St. Louis avenue, met him while in Indianapolis, and were attracted to him. They invited him to come to St. Louis with them and be their guest. He accepted and for two or three weeks lived with them at their St. Louis avenue home. After somebody had stolen the jewelry belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Hayes, suspicion fell on Donmeyer and his arrest followed.

WHEREABOUTS OF LOOMIS IS STILL A MYSTERY

Story of His Appearance in Paris Denied—Scotland Yard Enlisted.

[Associated Press Cable to The Gazette.]

PARIS, June 25.—The whereabouts of Kent J. Loomis, brother of the American assistant secretary of state, Francis B. Loomis, who disappeared shortly before or after the arrival of the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm II. at Plymouth on June 20, remains in the same state of doubt as yesterday. The officials who are conducting the search for the missing man say there is no truth in the report published by a London newspaper to the effect that Loomis turned up here yesterday. The announcement probably resulted from confusing the names of Loomis and W. H. Ellis. The latter sailed from Marseilles this afternoon for Abyssinia.

LONDON, June 25.—The mystery which surrounds the disappearance of Kent J. Loomis is no nearer solution. Consul General Evans and the assistant consuls have made and are still making all possible inquiries, but without the faintest trace of the missing man.

The statement of Gustave Flamm of San Francisco, a passenger of the Kaiser Wilhelm II., that he saw Loomis at Plymouth is so far uncorroborated.

One American who left for London on June 21, the day after the Kaiser Wilhelm II. touched at Plymouth, and who it was thought might have been Loomis, proved to be many years older than the assistant secretary of state's brother. At the request of Consul General Evans the hospitals at Plymouth are now being searched. Scotland Yard also has the matter in hand and the English papers, especially the local papers at Plymouth, continue to give prominence to the American's disappearance, so if Loomis is in England and in possession of his faculties he could scarcely fail to know he is being looked for.

MARSEILLES, June 25.—The Messagiera steamer Oxus sailed at 4 o'clock this afternoon for Abysinnia with W. J. Ellis, carrying the box containing the commercial treaty between the United States and Abyssinia on board. Mr. Ellis was accompanied by a secretary and a servant. Ellis had no information concerning the whereabouts of Mr. Loomis. The consulate here is also without information.

Pine Cone Derails a Car.

POTTSVILLE, PA., June 25.—A pine cone blown upon the tracks of the Tumbling Run branch, a suburban line of the trolley road, caused a car with eight passengers to leave the rails. The car collided with a telegraph pole and broke it like a pipe stem. This stopped the car near an embankment.

FOOD FACTS,

What an M. D. Learned.

A prominent physician of Rome, Ga., went through a food experience which he makes public:

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food and I also know from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients that the food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and sick patients always gain just as I did in strength and weight very rapidly.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely and go to the mountains of this state, but two months there did not improve me; in fact I was not quite as well as when I left home. My food absolutely refused to sustain me and it became plain that I must change, then I began to use Grape-Nuts food and in two weeks I could walk a mile without the least fatigue and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers I consider it a duty to make these facts public." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Trial 10 days on Grape-Nuts when the regular food does not seem to sustain the body will work miracles.

"There's a reason."

Then there are the embroidered Buster Brown collars—the pretty Venise lace stocks with medallion fronts—the plain white linen once-over flowing end stocks, trimmed with pearl buttons and medallions—the nobby mull stocks with lace insertings and two long tab fronts that reach almost to the belt. Chinese Beetle Is Imported to Protect American Orchards—Fatal Mosquito and House-Fly Disease Discovered—It Has Some Great Possibilities.

(Copyright, 1904, by John Elfreth Watkins.)

WASHINGTON, June 25.—"Put the bugs to work," says Uncle Sam. Verily this is an age of economy. Nothing is to go to waste! Not even the potential energy of insect life! The mites of the times as long as wide. He is usually of a gray or yellowish brown and has the hard shell of other beetles. His head fits into his neck with a ball and socket joint and is capable of a wide angle of rotation. He is equipped with a long, hard snout used as a lever for prying into the growing cotton bolls. At the end is a row of sharp teeth and the rotation of his head can give to this long proboscis an auger-like motion. He eats with a combination of boring, prying and chiseling motions.

The big cotton ant's jaws open sidewise, like a pair of nippers. They are large enough to grasp the weevil about the middle. This is his first move and while so doing he prys apart the joint between the hard-shelled beetle's abdomen and thorax. Then the bloodthirsty kelep bends his own body into a circle and inserts the stinger at his tail into the unprotected point where he has opened the beetle's armor. The poison of the sting takes immediate effect. The beetle ceases to struggle and while his legs are feebly twitching he is carried away in the jaws of his captor.

Large colonies of keleps will be distributed throughout the entire cotton belt as soon as the experiments at the Victoria laboratory shall have proved that these Guatemalan ants will thrive in the climate of Texas. This they probably will. They promise to become valued assistants in American agriculture.

The Victoria laboratory is a one-story frame structure situated in the midst of cotton fields. It is in charge of Field Agent W. D. Hunter of Dr. Howard's staff of entomologists. In this building and the adjacent experimental cotton field are employed many devices for experiment upon the boll weevil. Distributed about the field are wire cages used to confine the destructive beetles to selected cotton plants during the experiments. Inside the laboratory are apparatus for breeding weevils indoors. These consist of earthen dishes, containing the contaminated cotton bolls, and surmounting bell jars whose upper openings are covered with cloth, admitting air. Other laboratory equipment includes microscopes for observing insects in all stages of growth, delicate scales for weighing them and trays for storing them. Upon Mr. Hunter's desk is a motto, "Do it now!" And he is obeying it.

Oriental Orchard Protector.

Another foreigner lately imported by Uncle Sam to do good work in agriculture is an Asiatic beetle of the variety known as "ladybirds," because of their graceful form and delicate coloration. During a recent visit to China and Japan, Mr. C. L. Marlatt, the department of agriculture's entomologist in charge of experimental field work, discovered that this little beetle was doing good work toward the extermination of the various "scale insects," particularly the San Jose scale, that famous enemy of our orchard trees. In the early seventies this scale insect was imported to California from China with some flowering Chinese peach trees. Its first American appearance was in San Jose, whence it has spread throughout the Union and into Canada.

Its imported enemy, the "ladybird," is a hard-shelled, hemispherical beetle measuring an eighth of an inch across and which, when viewed from above, looks like a minute turtle. Its shell is glossy black, with two red spots. Mrs. Ladybird travels over trees infested with the scale insects, lifts the scales which these orchard enemies form on the bark, drags out the scale insect itself, turns about, thrusts in her ovipositor or egg-planter, and meanwhile slowly masticates the insect thus made to yield its place to her egg.

Upward of 200 of these good little beetles were shipped to Washington in boxes, but all but a pair died before an opportunity to use them was presented. Yet from this pair 200 young were produced in the following warm months in cages of wire screening placed over trees in the experimental orchard of the Department of Agriculture. From this first brood colonies have since been sent to various agricultural experiment stations. In four months 1,000 specimens were lately hatched out and distributed.

Oriental Bugs Which Flavor Figs.

More interesting still is Mrs. Blastophaga, lately imported from Algeria, to grow delicious figs on American soil. Although nearly every southerner sits beneath his own fig tree, the American fig has never been a commercial success. Hitherto it has been impossible here to compete with the large and delicious Smyrna fig. Cuttings of this latter variety have been imported to American and set out, but their fruit have inverlably dropped off before reaching the size of marbles. Since time immemorial the oriental fig grower has raised tasteless wild figs together with the delicious Smyrna variety, and at the beginning of each season has broken off the wild fruit and tied it to the limbs bearing the edible figs. This has been looked upon by white men as mere superstitious hocus pocus until a recent date, when it remained for scientists of our Department of Agriculture to solve the mystery. They found that the varities of Smyrna figs are all exclusively female, and that the wild or capri figs, on the other hand, are all exclusively male.

In the fig belt of the orient was recently discovered a strange insect, the Blastophaga, which acts as a matrimonial agent for these two sects of fig trees. The male or wild capri fig tree bears three crops of fruit each year. The last crop, remaining on the trees over winter, serves as houses for the full-grown Blastophaga. There this good insect remains until the first warm breath of spring, when she emerges and bores her way into the first crop of the next season's fruit, fast developing on the same tree.

She lays her eggs in these young, wild figs and soon her young emerge, covered with pollen. If these newly hatched insects thus bearing the pollen of the male capri fig are then allowed to enter the flower receptacles of the female Smyrna fig, a fine crop of fruit on the latter tree will be the result. It is thus that Blastophaga marries the wild, insipid male to the cultivated, delicious female. Their offspring combine the good points of both parents—the strength of the father and the sweetness of the mother, and thus is produced a Smyrna fig, which, instead of dropping before it is as large as a marble, swells into maturity nad sweetness.

From Algeria were imported large numbers of Blastophaga, roughly enconced for the winter in six boxes of capri fig cuttings. They were taken to Fresno, California, and allowed to emerge in the spring and lay their eggs in the first crop of fruit upon some growing capri trees. The young insects beginning to hatch out of the capri figs, the latter were strung upon rods fastened in the hitherto fruitless Smyrna fig trees. Eighteen thousand insect-laden wild figs were thus hung in 1,300 Smyrna trees. The result was 15 tons of good Smyrna figs thus grown on American soil in the one season.

All of this was the good work of Mrs. Blastophaga and her youngsters. She is a very minute creature, somewhat less than an eighth of an inch in lenght, with long, paddle-shaped wings, large compound eyes and protruding horns. Mr. Blastophaga, on the other hand, is wingless and partially blind.

Bugs to Spread Diseases.

All of these foreign insects are apparently happy at their tasks. They are being given every comfort, are protected and their enemies are being killed. But some of our domestic bugs which Dr. Howard has recently put to work have fared less happily. They have been given the martyr's role to play. That there are several pestilences which, at times, reap wholesale harvests of insect life is now know to entomologists. One of these, given the unpronounceable name of entomophthorea, is fatal to the common house fly, as well as to certain mosquitoes, caterpillars, grasshoppers, small gnats and midges. Germs of this disease and of others can now be grown in glass tubes with which healthy insects may be infected. Dr. Howard and his assistants have already made some preliminary experiments along this line.

Certain grasshoppers were enlisted for the enterprise. hey were dipped in the glass tubes of diseased fluid, borne into the field and allowed to return to their kind. In many cases the insects in the fields died by thousands. But the success of the processs depends largely upon weather conditions.

As yet no experminte along this novel line have been made with the housefly and the mosquito. The nation will approve of a fund for the employment of any number of these insects to sow seeds of this pestilence among their kind. The savant who hits upon a scheme for spreading mosquito entomophtorea or fly ditto will be assured a generous monument and a long, front page obituary with portrait.

wood and field are now to be put in harness!

Foreign bugs are being imported for various purposes. Some are being enlisted in armies and directed against our enemies. These foes to be set upon by such tiny fighters are not human, to be sure. It will be a war of bug against bug.

The most brainy insect known to science, viz., the ant, is the latest conscript. The news dispatches have told how in Guatemala Mr. O. F. Cook, a botanist of the government's plant industry bureau, recently discovered a large, reddish-brown ant which fosters an enmity, instinctive and savage, for that beetle known as the boll weevil, which is causing such dire havoc in our cotton fields.

A "boll weevil laboratory" has been established at Victoria, Tex., the focus of the cotton beetle's ravages, by Dr. L. O. Howard, chief entomologist of the department of agriculture. Queens of the newly discovered cotton ant are, together with a number of workers, being sent to this workshop. Permanent colonies are to be established in the experimental cotton field adjoining.

The first battle on American soil between the ant and beetle armies will be waged at Victoria, where, during the conflict, interested entomologists will be posted about the field as war observers. If the ant forces win this test struggle their victory will be an event of good augury for our cotton planter, whose tribute to this insect was $50,000,000 last year.

On the eve of this momentous struggle it is important to consider the opponents and their equipment. The imported ant soldier is known as the "kelep." This name has been applied to him by the Indians of Guatemala, who speak of him also as "the animal of the cotton." But in spite of his long association with the cotton plant, these Indians do not know that the kelep has for many years saved their cotton crops from the destructive weevil. In fact, they do not know that the weevil itself is an enemy of cotton. In seasons when the helpful ant has been scarce and the beetle has been left to do its work unmolested these superstitious people have attributed their scarcity of cotton to the failure of the grower to abstain from eating salt at planting time.

The kelep excavates a nest three feet or more into the ground. He is a hardy insect. Experiments already made show that he will survive confinement for 12 days without food. Although he is a giant in size man can handle him with impunity. He has more of the waspish ill temper of many of the stinging and biting ants of his tropical clime. He does not the least injure cotton or any other plant, so far as has been discovered. He drinks the nectar secreted by the cotton leaf, but does not trouble the flossy boll. But this sweet food is simply an incident to his diet. He is a much more efficient destroyer of noxious insects than is the spider or the toad. But upon the harmless insects inhabiting the cotton plant he looks with indifference when the weevil is present.

This beetle is about three-eighths of an inch long, over all, and is about three

STENOGRAPHER HAD TO WRITE HER DISMISSAL

She Was Required to Typewrite Letters Saying the Force Was Not Required.

"The average girl who has earned her living for any length of time by working in an office can recall meeting numerous odd people and experiences, but I think that an incident, or, rather, an event, which happened while I was holding my first position is in a class by itself," said a young woman stenographer the other day.

"I was employed by a merchandise broker, whose force consisted of three clerks, a young woman who did general office work, two office boys and myself. Our employer was a man of precise and systematic habit, who strove in vain to inculcate his business principles into those who worked for him. For some reason, despite all his efforts, the affairs of the office were never in satisfactory order, and he finally concluded to replace his entire staff. He accordingly dictated to me a letter of dismissal, the form of which made it impossible to tell for whom it was intended. I was burning with curiosity, while taking the notes, to know who was to receive the unwelcome billet, and after making a rapid mental calculation decided that it was most likely for Brown with Smith and Jones as dark horses, so to speak. Imagine the shock I got when, at the conclusion of the dictation, my employer said:

"'You will please make seven copies. Address one to each member of the office force, and after submitting them to me for signature mail them so that they will be received here tomorrow morning.'

"'Why, that means me, I suppose,' I faltered in confusion. 'I—'

"'I am glad to see that your perception has been stimulated,' he replied, as he turned away.

"Before leaving I protested that it was unfair to have to write my own dismissal, but I was curtly informed that it was in the line of my duty and that business and sentiment had no affinity for each other."

THE PITTSBURG GAZETTE BUREAU.
Young's Ocean Pier.
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 25.

One of the most thrilling rescues of the season was made here this afternoon by Life Guards Mills and Parker, when four little children, two of whom were nearly exhausted, were rescued from the surf near Heinz's pier.

John Curran, aged 6, was wading in the surf when he went out too far and went down in a hole. His 8-year-old sister, Fannie, rushed in after him and just as she reached hold of him they both sank beneath the water. Two young lady bathers, Miss Hazel Leyrer and sister, Mabel, daughters of Lewis M. Leyrer of Germantown, rushed to the assistance of the children, but, owing to the deepness of the hole and the swift current, they, too, were drawn seaward. The piteous cries of the children had by this time attracted Guards Mills and Parker, who went to their assistance with the life boat and buoy. The Curran children were almost exhausted when brought ashore and it was over an hour before they were resuscitated.

The first excursion of the season from Pittsburgh arrived last night, and with it came a large number of westerners. The train came in on the second section of the bridge train from Philadelphia. These excursions will be continued at frequent intervals during the remainder of the season.

The perfect weather of the past week has filled the island with a throng of visitors from every part of the country and the crowds far exceed those of previous years. The boardwalk and beach daily present an appearance not unlike that of a hot day in August, and Mayor Stoy has announced that, owing to the immense number of bathers, he will appoint the full force of life guards within a few days. Eighteen guards are already on duty.

During the past week the Atlantic City Horse Show association prepared the prize lists for its sixth annual exhibition at Inlet park, July 19 to 23, inclusive. It is the most varied and attractive prize list ever issued by the association. The classes number nearly 60 and are well divided into amateur, open-to-all, local, and maiden contests. One of the big features in the open-to-all event will be the Hotel Windsor challenge cup, valued at $300. All entries will close July 2. The following judges have been selected: Godfrey S. Mann and John R. Valentine of Philadelphia, George B. Hulme, Francis M. Ware, E. C. LaMontague and Morton W. Smith of New York.

New Postoffice Going Up.

Work on the new Atlantic City postoffice building, at Pacific and Pennsylvania avenues, was commenced during the week. The building, under the contract, must be completed not later than June 1, next year. The office will be one of the finest in the state.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Atlantic City Yacht club, held a few days ago, the following directors for the ensuing year were elected: Col. Thomas Potter, Jr., Louis Kuehnle, David R. Barrett, T. A. Nuttall, John A. Manz, William Muhlen, Charles C. Fortner, Harry Tietjen, Harry Wootton, Lewis P. Scott, George W. Carmony and John Donnelly.

The executive committee of the American section of the International Railway conference, together with the local entertainment committee of the American Railway association, met at the Hotel Dennis on Thursday and Friday. The delegates to the meeting included some of the most prominent officials in railway circles.

The Garrick theater, a new and model playhouse just completed at Arkansas avenue and the boardwalk, was opened on Thursday evening. The first week's attraction is Richard Buhler in "Paul Revere."

Red Cross Likes Seashore.

At the closing session of the supreme council, Legion of the Red Cross, which met here in annual session during the week, it was unanimously decided to meet again next year in this city.

The Rea theater, on Young's pier, has been closed for repairs and will not open until July 2. During this time the stage of the theater will be enlarged considerably and eight new boxes will be added. Several additional exits will also be built.

Atlantic City is to have a floral parade in August that promises to eclipse anything of its kind ever given in the country. B. F. Keith, the theatrical man, is back of the scheme, and will enter nine chairs, one for each of his theaters. Of the 700 hotels in Atlantic City, one-half of them will enter one chair each, and the various business houses will also enter chairs. It is proposed to combine humor and beauty in a spectacular procession. The belief of the promoters is that the boardwalk offers tempting possibilities for a mardi gras that might equal New Orleans'.

CAPE MAY

CAPE MAY, N. J., June 25.—In accordance with the usual custom at the shore, the last Saturday in June is known as the opening day, and consequently the remainder of the hotels which had not opened heretofore were opened to receive guests and the full swing of the summer season was started. Numbered among the throng of visitors which has been gradually increasing since the middle of the month, are many from Pittsburgh, and the prospects are that the visitors from that city and the surrounding section will greatly outnumber those which came from that locality in previous summers. The hops at the hotels are being largely attended and the outdoor pleasures, which are numerous here, are eagerly participated in by the visitors, who mingle but yet with a reservedness which exemplifies a refinement peculiar to any other resort than at Cape May.

In honor of the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Bar association, which will take place at the Stockton hotel on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, a series of events has been arranged, which will keep the delegates busy during the interims between meetings. The last of these will be a banquet on Thursday evening, at which there will be some prominent speakers, among them Henry E. Davis of Washington, President Woodrow Wilson of Princeton university, R. L. Crawford of Waynesburg, Pa., Gen. John P. Glenn and Walter George Smith of Philadelphia.

Next Saturday the first of the afternoon teas will be given at the clubhouse of the Cape May Golf club. These teas are the culmination of a series of social events which transpire during each week and are attended more largely than any other event of the week. The Women's association of the club manages the social affairs.

The Cape May Yacht club has its new clubhouse completed and it was used on Thursday evening for the first time, when a business meeting took place in it. In the latter part of next week a banquet is to be given to commemorate the completion of the building and to formally introduce the members of the club to each other.

Mrs. George Singer and Miss Singer of Pittsburgh are at the Duquesne for the summer.

George Roberts has arrived for the summer and is taking an active part in the social life.

Samuel Sugarth is among Pittsburghers at the Columbia.

Mrs. W. G. Huhn of Pittsburgh is located here for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Sneed of Pittsburgh are sojourning at the Windsor.

E. P. Remington is among Pittsburghers who have recently been at the shore.

Ex-Senator William Flinn and his son, George H. Flinn, are registered at the Windsor.

ASBURY PARK

ASBURY PARK, N. J., June 25.—This has been a week of surprises. With the record of a 22-pound bass taken from the ocean after a game fight, the establishment of a 75-minute express flyer between here and New York, the addition of a new engine to the city's fire service, the capture of a sneak thief by a merry party of young summer people playing sleuths and winding up tonight with the city's debut as a claimant for honors as a lyric center, Asbury park has been getting to the front in leaps as the liveliest and most remarkable of the Atlantic coast watering places.

The first flurry of the week was caused by a sneak thief who visited some of the cottages and a few of the hotels. He paid his respects to the Collins cottage in Bond street, where Mr. and Mrs. Roland Whitten of Pittsburgh are summering, but secured nothing. Every hotel had its corps of amateur sleuths, and looking for this harmless Jack Sheppard furnished excitement for a day and a night. The fellow was caught red-handed in the basement of a boarding house, and when he found himself surrounded by athletic young men and a number of determined young women, lately graduated from city gyms, he suddenly looked wise and began to unfold a life insurance proposition. After he went away with the police the merry young sleuths began to discuss the trick that failed.

Next came the startling information that all the previous failures records of the season had been smashed by Elmer Hunt, a summer boarder, who landed a stripped bass weighing 32 pounds. Then every other boarder got busy looking for that particular fish's twin brother. Finally there came the announcement that "The banker's special," a 75-minute train to New York, would be put on at once on the Central Jersey line. New York city sends a great many people here. Several thousand came in this evening.

But the great event of the week was the instrumental and vocal concert which attracted nearly 5,000 people to the Casino tonight. This was the first of a series of these mixed concerts to take place Saturday and Sunday evenings. At these performances Pryor's full military will appear, introducing 32 men. Vocalists of national and international fame will be heard at these concerts, which are to be of the highest order. The first of these concerts tonight was a brilliant success. Mrs. Alice J. Shaw, the celebrated whistler, scored her usual hit.

The handsome Arcade building on the beach front will be opened to the public next Wednesday with a promenade concert and infernal hop. The Arcade is for the use of the public, just the same as the Casino.

Without doubt the display of fireworks arranged for by the city fathers for the night of July 4 will be far ahead of anything of the kind ever seen here. There will be 53 different kinds of pyrotechnics, comprising nearly 500 separate pieces, including 100 bombs with from three to five breaks. "The bombardment of Gettysburg," a "tapestry device" and pyrotechnic pieces, will be presented as set pieces.

The Rev. Dr. Gillespie of Allegheny City has charge of the Asbury park Christian and Missionary alliance branch here. He has been here a week. Immediately upon his arrival he entered upon his alliance work.

Mr. D. W. Eyban of Pittsburgh is here for the season. He is stopping at the St. James.

Miss Lida Lord Reed of Pittsburgh is enjoying her vacation at a North Asbury park cottage.

Mrs. S. G. Donaldson and her daughter, Harriet Donaldson, are located here for the season. They arrived from Pittsburgh last Saturday.

NEWPORT

NEWPORT, R. I., June 25.—The last few seasonable days have brought an influx of cottagers, but the real opening of the social period will be the next two weeks distant. Not until this week was Easton's beach, the popular bathing resort, opened, and as usual there will be no music at the Casino until early next month. Here and there an informal luncheon is announced, but there has been nothing yet beyond the social gathering of tinters, quite without frills and scallops. As for two or three Junes past tennis and squash are the early magnets at the Casino, serving to rally about all the members of the younger set.

The Casino, by the way, has at last been completely redecorated for the first time since it was built, 20 years ago. This time the finishing has been done in light shades, making the interior vastly more cheerful.

The Casino has outlived the completion of the Country club, but Spouting Rock beach, the rendezvous for an exclusive din, seems likely to prove more of a thorn in its flesh than ever the approaching season, because of the new pavilion on the sands that can be used for dances, dinners or concerts.

The Clambake club, too, is up and doing beyond all precedent, having bought more land and laid plans for enlarging its quarters, so that entertainments can be given there.

The scheme for tea houses on the larger estates also tends to draw merrymakers from the oldest social clearing house.

For a long time the Gooseberry Island and West Island Fishing clubs were the only havens of refuge for jolly parties and they were too distant to cut deeply into the Casino.

The Benjamin Thaws of Pittsburgh are now fully settled for the season at Beach mound, their fine villa, near Spouting Rock beach. They opened their place several weeks ago, but have since spent much time at the Thaw's Lake and Beach in York and Pennsylvania. Young Thaw, who was injured sometime since by falling from a horse, is apparently as well as ever once more.

SPRING LAKE

SPRING LAKE BEACH, N. J., June 25.—Society folk have no reason to complain of a dearth of exciting incidents this week, for the season has been opened with two social functions of such brilliancy and magnitude as to completely dwarf all of the many very elaborate functions for which Spring Lake has been noted in former years.

What with the marriage of Millionaire Martin Maloney's daughter, Marguerite to Louis Carberry Ritchie, by Cardinal Satolli last Wednesday morning, the banquet of the president and board of directors of the Spring Lake Hotel and Realty Company last night in the great dining hall of the new Monmouth hotel, and the formal opening of that beautiful hostelry tonight with a full dress ball, there has been but few idle moments for society to catch its breath.

The banquet on Friday night was one of the most elaborate dinners ever given on this part of the Jersey coast and was served with great ceremony. Over 150 covers were laid and each guest was presented with a beautiful souvenir of the pleasant event.

The new Monmouth hotel opened tonight to an unexpectedly heavy registration, despite the fact of the very large advance bookings which had been anticipated and provided for. Among the Pittsburgh contingent were noted Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Hallstead, Mr. Willis L. King and Miss King.

SEA GIRT

SEA GIRT, N. J., June 25.—This retired and exclusive seaside retreat is destined for some very lively social times this summer, as the early advent of a brigade of the New Jersey national guard in July is always the magnet that draws to this resort quite a bevy of belles and social butterflys who dote on shoulder straps and gold lace.

The arrival this week of General Bird W. Spencer, inspector general of rifle practice, with his charming wife, is the sure precursor of a brilliant social season from a military view point. They are registered at the Beach house, as is also Mrs. H. J. Graham of Chicago and Pittsburgh. The Parker house is entertaining Mr. G. H. White of Pittsburgh.

Murder and Suicide in Missouri.

ST. JOSEPH, MO., June 25.—W. N. Bowman, a street car conductor, fatally shot Mollie Stuteville and then killed himself in a rooming house here. Jealousy was the cause.

INVESTIGATING FRENCH SCANDAL

Public Opinion Interested Solely in Work of Committee of Inquiry.

WITNESSES ARE BEING HEARD

Members of Religious Orders Refuse to Make Public the Names of People Who Solicited Bribes—Days of the Combes Ministry Are Numbered.

(Copyright, 1904, by New York Herald Co.)

PARIS, June 25.—Public opinion is now solely interested in the labors of the committee of inquiry, and politicians themselves are so much absorbed by this antechamber romance that they mechanically pass clauses of most important bills, such as those of the two-year military service bill, or the insurance companies' bill. One would think that there are now in France only the bribed and the bribers. The committee itself is pursuing its task in a two-fold way. Sometimes it hears witnesses like M. Millier and M. Troufflot, who only tell about the sums paid to the committee of commerce and industry for the last general elections. Sometimes it hears other witnesses who only speak of the sums demanded of the monks of Chartreux, for their authorization, or proposed to the government with the same object.

Two Different Chapters.

This makes two different chapters of scandals. They are connected by the two-fold fact that M. Crabert is the same man who paid $2,000,000 to the committee and who suggested that the monks of Chartreux would be quite willing to pay $400,000 in order to be authorized and that it was M. Michael Lagrave, French commissioner to the St. Louis exposition, who got up the committee through which he acquainted the government with M. Crabert's idea to which he attached more importance than it really merited.

All the disturbance is due to the excess of zeal of M. Lagrave in transforming into a formal proposition what was only an empty suggestion. The unlucky man is rather overtasked by it, for his official duties hardly correspond to the work which is being given him, and which has ended in painful scenes between M. Combes and himself before the committee of inquiry.

On the whole, as far as concerns the committee of commerce and industry, its president, M. Mascurand, a prominent Paris merchant, when summoned before the committee of inquiry, stated that he had done nothing illegal and that he was ready to do it again. As far as concerns the millions for the monks of Chartreux, we come in collision with the peculiar spirit of the members of religious congregations.

They by letter, and their friends by real testimony, continue to affirm that some people, whose names they refuse to give, have demanded money to obtain authorization. But as they will not give any names, we find ourselves face to face with one of those anonymous calumnies against which defense is impossible.

The result of this attitude is to exasperate the Republican majority in the chamber, as well as the senate. And if the senate passes the bills already voted by the chamber of deputies against the congregations, the monks of Chartreux can say that they are responsible.

The majority, moreover, seems to be rather weak. Of this, it gave a proof in organizing the committee of inquiry. This committee, the majority of which is composed of nationalists, wanted to make a scandal in the chamber of deputies by an interpellation on the incident in which M. Lagrave and M. Edgar Combes called each other liars. The majority of the chamber repelled this attempt, and in this people saw a proof of a desire to save themselves if they should fail in finding out anything. For that matter, the days of the Combes ministry are numbered.

DOG BITES MURDERER.

The Slayer of Little Girl So Overcome by Intelligence of Animal That He Confesses.

BERLIN, June 25.—(Special Cable.)—A dog at Hagenhof, in Brunswick, has led to the detection of a child murderer. The victim was the 11-year-old daughter of a farmer. She was found dead in a shed, and it was supposed that one of the farm hands, of whom there was a score, had committed the crime. They were summoned together by the police, and placed in a row in the farmyard. The dog was then taken into the room where the body of the murdered girl lay, and then to the shed where the body was found.

Then, led into the barnyard, the animal rushed straight at a laborer named Duwe and bit his leg. Thinking this might be a mere matter of chance, the police ordered Duwe to change his clothes and take a different position in the line of men. A second time the dog rushed at him, and bit his leg again. Duwe was so overcome that he confessed his guilt.

Bitten by Cellar Rats.

Steve Bablock, a Slav, was severely bitten on the hand by rats while sleeping in the cellar of his boarding house in River avenue, Braddock, yesterday afternoon. He went there owing to the heat.

SOCIETY HELPS SLUM CHILDREN

Miss Viola Tree Makes First Appearance on London Stage for Fresh Air Fund.

SOME REALISTIC TABLEAUX

Contrast of "Bedtime" in East End and in Comfortable Cottage Depicted at Benefit Given—"Waiting to Fetch Mother Home."

[Special Cable to The Gazette.]

LONDON, June 25.—There seems something singularly appropriate in the fact that a charming young girl like Miss Viola Tree should make her first appearance on the London stage in her father's company, in aid of a fresh air fund. Every seat in His Majesty's theater was filled to welcome the appearance of the young girl, whose father is so deservedly popular.

"Twenty thousand poor children," said Mr. Tree in a little speech at the end of the performance, "will benefit by your presence here today," and her rendering of Shakespeare's Viola was modest, musical and full of humor.

Some years ago, when she was still a little child, Miss Viola Tree was asked if she intended to become an actress like her mother. "Oh, no!" was the child's prompt reply, "when I grow up I am going to marry."

But no doubt she will live to fulfill both callings.

Society in London has been combining charity with amusement to a greater extent this summer than ever before. The Tableaux Vivants arranged by a galaxy of beautiful and talented women, in aid of settlement work in the East End of London, with which I am connected, were among the most successful that have ever been organized.

It would be difficult to say how much was due to the beauty of the presentations and how much to the beauty of the performers; but for originality, perhaps the picture arranged by Lady Ganby was the most striking.

In the first scene her young daughter, a beautiful girl who has just been presented, took the character of Queen Isabella, wife of Philip IV., and little Miss Asquith, daughter of the ex-cabinet minister, represented the Infanta Maria Theresa, while Mr. Shannon, the famous portrait painter, posed as Velasquez.

The gorgeous Spanish dresses, correct in every detail, the curiously becoming head dress of short curls which formed a square line around the face, were the exact reproduction of Velasquez's pictures, and the pale child with her oval face, was particularly suggestive of the great master's portraits.

In the second tableau the picture was finished, a smaller frame was introduced within the larger, and Velasquez was standing by his completed work, and a more lovely picture has seldom been seen.

The countess of Lytton arranged a tableau which reproduced Burne Jones' "Mirror of Venus," in which some of the most beautiful women in London admirably represented his tall, classic figures.

But the picture which perhaps appealed most strongly to the sympathies of the audience, as it depicted the charity for which they had assembled, was the group of East End children, arranged by the ladies of the Bromley settlement, which was entitled "Bed Time in the Slums."

The scene represented a narrow alley. To the left was the brightly lighted gin palace, and to the right a tumbledown doorstep. The moonlight, which shone upon the street, lighted up the wearied, pale faces of a group of children huddled together, a tall boy holding a baby, and tired children asleep on the steps.

The church clock in the distance pointed to midnight, and at the door of the public house stood a ragged child, with an eager face lit by the light from within, peering through the door in the hopes of catching a sight of "Mother," for whom the children were waiting.

Such a scene is common to the workers in the London slums, but to many who assembled in that beautiful Imperial theater it was a revelation of a life of which they knew nothing.

The contrast, however, was shown in the next picture, which was equally called "Bed Time," a cottage garden, full of blooming summer flowers, and a happy group of country children, with a tiny baby in the midst, who stood as still as though she were a wax model, holding up her tiny night gown, while with outstretched arms the mother waited for her.

These pictures were suggested to me by the fact that on a bitter night last winter a little lad sat on the curbstone looking hopelessly at the passing traffic.

The clock on the church was striking 12. I stopped to ask him what he did there. He pointed to the glaring lights and swinging door of the public house across the street, and said: "I'm waiting to fetch mother 'ome at closing time."

DEATHS IN PITTSBURGH.

Consumption, Typhoid Fever and Pneumonia Lead List of Fatal Diseases.

During the week of June 18, 122 persons died in Pittsburgh, compared with 117 the week before and 139 in the same week last year. The principal causes were typhoid fever 11, pneumonia 9, consumption 13, heart disease 6 and violence 10.

During the same week there were 20 cases of typhoid fever, 8 of scarlet fever and 15 of diphtheria. Three cases of typhoid fever and one each of scarlet fever and diphtheria were reported yesterday.

WEATHER CONDITIONS PLEASANT IN PARIS

Festival in Honor of the Sun Takes Place on the Eiffel Tower.

PARIS, June 25.—Although the nights have been somewhat chilly during the week, the weather left nothing to be desired; clear skies and bright sunshine, making the conditions most pleasant. The wind was light and maintained a northwest to southwest direction. Generally this type of weather has been propitious for anglers, whose season opened on Sunday. Hundreds, taking advantage of the fine mornings, put in a little sport on the river or the lakes in the Boles de Boulogne before proceeding to business.

The summer solstice was marked by a festival in honor of the sun, which took place on top of the Eiffel tower at midnight, the idea being that at that height there will be continual twilight till sunrise. Scientists and artists assembled under the presidency of M. Camille Flammarion, who delivered a lecture on the history of sun worship in ancient and modern times, illustrated with limelight views. A concert followed with appropriate selections, which included Wagner's "Hymn to a Star," and Massenett's "Twilight." M. Mounett-Sully recited Victor Hugo's poem, "At a Window During the Night," and a poet named Rameau recited his own prayer to the sun. A banquet and firmament observations followed. There was some disappointment, as there were few hours of darkness.

PEOPLE AT METZ COMPLAIN

French Subjects of Kaiser Object to His Using Their Fields for Army Maneuvers.

PARIS, June 25.—(Special Cable.)—The French inhabitants in the neighborhood of Metz are complaining bitterly of their fate under Germany, not because they are subjected to worse treatment than others in Alsace-Lorraine by the kaiser's government, but because their fields are continually being used as rifle ranges by the garrison.

Not only are the poor farmers always in danger of their lives, but they find it impossible to make a living by farming when their fields are occupied by soldiers 144 out of 300 annual working days. They have repeatedly complained to the war department, but can get no relief, as the German government cannot get the Socialists to appropriate money enough for the establishment of permanent rifle ranges.

The kaiser says that they ought to be glad to be of service to the Fatherland, but somehow or other the farmers cannot get used to looking at it in that way.

OBJECT TO MONUMENT.

French People Near Gravelotte Dislike New Commemoration of German Victory.

PARIS, June 25.—Special Cable.)—The people near Gravelotte who are as French today as they were 35 years ago, and who were radiantly happy when the great tower, built to commemorate the battle of Gravelotte, had to come down to give room for a fort two years ago, are grieved to hear that patriotic Germans are going to build another monument in memory of the unlucky war which tore them away from France. This monument is going to be a kind of military Valhalla.

Under its arched ceilings are to be paintings al fresco representing battle scenes from the terrible year of 1870, and statues of generals who fought against France. In the center will be erected on a high pedestal a bust of Kaiser Wilhelm I., and the monument will be surmounted by a statue in black marble representing the angel of peace (how very appropriate that this angel should be black in Germany.)

Inscriptions on marble tablets will mention the names of the regiments which took part in the battles and the names of the officers who fell.

BEDFORD SPRINGS

BEDFORD SPRINGS, PA., June 25.—The Bedford Springs hotel opened its doors to the public Saturday, June 18, with the brightest prospects of a prosperous season it has ever had. In fact, the bookings for the month of July far surpass those of any previous year. The managers are assured that this will be the greatest season in the history of this resort. The owners of the Bedford Springs hotel have spent over $75,000 in improvements. They include the entire reconstruction of the interior of building A, a new brick kitchen, new power house and electric plant, new spring house, a new and beautiful bath house and swimming pool, the removal of old buildings, including the former bath house, ice house, carpenters' shop, old power house, kitchens and stables, with consequent marked improvement in the appearance of the lawns and grounds about the hotel.

No single feature in the new plan will attract more attention or probably be received with more favor than the beautiful new marble and white tile bath house and swimming pool. This is an entirely new building, Greek in design, with luxurious appointments that will meet every requirement for healthful improvement as well as pleasure.

A very attractive feature of the bath house is a glass-inclosed solarium, where amid palms and flowers one may lounge the time away as best suits one's fancy. This solarium, circular in form, faces the south, and looking far down the Cumberland valley, offers unequalled facilities for enjoying the sun on cold days without exposure to drafts or treacherous winds, at the same time providing an outlook of beautiful scenery.

The golf links have been put in the best possible condition, so that now they will equal any in the state.

Rear Admiral McGowan, U. S. N., is located at the Bedford Springs hotel.

Mrs. Theodore Varney, well known in Pittsburgh society, is at the resort.

Fred Magee O'Leary of Pittsburgh is spending some time at the Arandale hotel.

H. A. Kuhn and wife of Pittsburgh occupy apartments at the Springs hotel.

Mayor Vance C. McCormick of Harrisburg is domiciled at the Bedford Springs hotel.

Other arrivals at the Bedford Springs hotel the past week were M. C. Webster, T. J. Fell, Jr., H. Gampe, Jacob H. Peters, Miss R. Peters, Miss Reislands, Miss N. Reislands, Mrs. John L. LeConte and maid, Philadelphia; H. B. Clark, Louisville; H. G. Ruxton, Keyser, W. Va.; J. K. Andrews, Baltimore; Dr. Arthur F. Bissell, Mrs. Sanford Bissell, New York. Arandale hotel: S. Tanzer, Cumberland; L. D. Lutz, Hubbelstown; Louis C. Parsons, Lancaster; A. C. Williams, Harrisburg; Eldred E. Inngerick, James H. Spear, Miss Julia Leaning Wood, George A. French, William J. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. T. R. White, G. W. Davidson, C. A. Murphy, Philadelphia.

OCEAN GROVE

OCEAN GROVE, N. J., June 25.—The summer season was formally opened here today by the officers of the Ocean Grove Campmeeting association. At 2 p. m., Bishop Fitzgerald of St. Louis, president of the association, led a consecration service in the temple. It was attended by large delegations from the various hotels, all of which are now open. Tonight the auditorium was thrown open to the public for the first time this season, and quite a throng came to see an interesting exhibition of moving pictures. Tomorrow the regular Sunday services of the summer will begin in the auditorium.

A great many Methodists of Western Pennsylvania are becoming interested in this campmeeting resort, and before long this watering place will be as well known west of Harrisburg as it is known east of it. Prof. Tali Esen Morgan, who has charge of all the musical features and all the entertainments here, went to Pittsburgh almost weekly all last winter to organize and rehearse the Pittsburgh chorus, a body of 70 young ladies and gentlemen at the Second Presbyterian church of Pittsburgh. Many of these singers will appear in the Ocean Grove festival chorus during the present season.

Mrs. Lucy DeArmit Williams, who holds the record as being the woman who has written more insurance than any other woman in Western Pennsylvania, or probably in the country, came from her home in Pittsburgh a month ago and opened the Pittsburgh House on Bath avenue. Last year she had the Pittsburgh Cottage here and quite a following of Pittsburghers came with her. This year she had to take a larger house, and took possession of the hostelry formerly known as the Norm... and kept by Mrs. Carrie Post. Mrs. Williams took hold she pr... to beautify the place and make it comfortable for her guests. She improved the lawns and gardens, increased the electric lights and added other modern improvements. That Pittsburghers appreciate the efforts made in their behalf by Mrs. Williams is evidenced by this group of summer people from Pittsburgh who are at her house now: Mr. Albert Little, Audrey Trevhan, Miss Ella Smith of East End, Pittsburgh; Miss Marie Kline, Juniatta Megraw, Mrs. L. Davison and her son T. M. Davison, and Mr. W. D. Kerns and her daughter Miss Jennie Kerns. Mrs. Kerns is the widow of Dr. Kerns, who was a famous physician of Pittsburgh; Mrs. Guy Mitchell of Washington, D. C., and her daughter Dorothy, are also guests at the Pittsburgh house.

BELMAR

BELMAR, N. J., June 25.—With a brand new boardwalk to replace the old one pilfered by old Neptune in one of his angry moods last winter, the completion of the new club house on Ocean avenue of the Belmar club, an exclusive social organization of summer cottagers and regular hotel guests, and a phenomenal spurt among the bonifaces in rebuilding and refurnishing their hostelries has placed this beautiful seaside resort in the front rank of claimants for the patronage of summer vacationists.

The Hotel Colorado, William B. Dwyer, manager, swung wide its doors today for a good booking of old time guests. The usual Saturday night full dress hop was attended by a large number of the summer cottagers besides the usual happy throng of young people, guests at the hotel. Among the guests noticed on the register were Mr and Mrs. A. M. Chapin of Pittsburgh.

The Hotel Windsor also opened today for the usual long season which this house extends into the autumn months.

James E. Fell and family of Allegheny are expected to open their cottage on River avenue and the ocean on July 1.

Gov. Pennypacker Will Make Several Appointments Upon His Return to Harrisburg.

CONFERENCE IN CHICAGO

Discussed Names of Candidates With Senator Penrose and Commissioner Durham—One Department Keeps Openings Quiet.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU.
HARRISBURG, PA., June 25.

Gov. Pennypacker is expected to make several important appointments on his return here on Tuesday from his farm at Schwenksville, where he is resting from the effects of his strenuous visit to Chicago during the Republican national convention. The governor talked over this matter with Senator Penrose and Insurance Commissioner Durham while at Chicago, and it is thought all the prospective appointees will be satisfactory to the leaders.

There is a vacancy in the forestry department, created by the promotions there caused by the resignation of Dr. J. T. Rothrock of West Chester, as commissioner; two others in the department of public grounds and buildings, and several minor places to be filled in other departments.

A number of temporary appointments will be made in another department over which the governor has no control, the chief of which is anxious to avoid publicity of this fact until after he has consulted Senator Penrose, because of the fear that if it becomes generally known that he is about to make these appointments he will be delayed with applications.

Among the appointments which the governor will make is that of member of the state forestry commission, created by the recent resignation of ex-Congressman Albert C. Hopkins of Lock Haven because of ill-health. The governor regards this as one of the most important places in his gift and he will consult Dr. Rothrock before making a selection.

There is great demand for appointment to the vacancy on the board of trustees of the Norristown state insane hospital, created by the death of Dr. G. M. Stiles of Norristown. John Booth, a Conshohocken manufacturer, has been recommended by the Montgomery Republican organization for the vacancy. It is thought he will be appointed, unless the governor should decide to name a personal friend.

Seeks Harmony in Philadelphia.

Attempt is again being made by State Chairman Hall to harmonize the differences among the opposing Democratic factions in Philadelphia, Dauphin, Luzerne and Westmoreland counties for the purpose of making something like a respectable showing for the Democratic national ticket in November. Hall says that he has planned an active campaign for this year. Immediately after the St. Louis convention he will make an effort to perfect a semblance of an organization in every county of the state.

Outside of Berks, York and a few other counties which still remain in the Democratic column, the party has no real organization and in some counties it is almost impossible to find enough Democrats to fill up a county ticket or to serve as delegates to the state convention and as state committeemen.

Hall will leave for St. Louis next Saturday in the special train with the Pennsylvania delegation, and during his absence the state headquarters will be in charge of George W. Haggerty of this city. When Hall returns he will appoint a resident secretary in place of T. K. Van Dyke of this city and select other headquarters' employes.

Hall's efforts to restore harmony among the warring factions of the Dauphin county Democracy by the appointment of Naudain Hamilton in place of Robert Stucker, a lieutenant of ex-Mayor Fritchey, have been a dismal failure. The anti-Fritchey Democrats refuse to recognize Hamilton because they believe his sympathies are with Fritchey and they refused to participate in today's primaries. The county convention for the nomination of a local ticket will be held next Tuesday.

Elkin Favors Smith.

The Republican conferees of the Twenty-seventh congressional district, composed of Armstrong, Clarion, Indiana and Jefferson counties, for the nomination of a candidate for congress will be held next Thursday at Indiana. According to precedent, William O. Smith of Punxsutawney, the present representative from this district, is entitled to a renomination, and it is confidently predicted by his friends here that he will be nominated on the second ballot.

Smith's opponents are ex-Congressman Samuel M. Jack of Indiana, Maj. J. G. Beale of Kittanning, who for many years has been wanting to go to congress, and J. T. Maffett of Clarion. Ex-Attorney General Elkin and his followers throughout the district want Smith renominated because they believe he is entitled to another term.

The Citizens Union party has been organized in Somerset county for the purpose of placing a local ticket in the field against the regular Republican ticket. The leaders of the new party are Charles C. Streng, Charles L. Walker, James L. Wilson, Conrad Herwig and Charles Modispan. They have filed the necessary papers in the prothonotary's office here. Certain Democratic leaders are suspected of being behind the new party and it is probable that an attempt will be made to effect fusion. The regular Republicans are not giving themselves any concern over the new party movement.

Another attempt to break the Republican senatorial deadlock in the Franklin-Huntingdon district will be made in this city at the meeting of the conferees on July 22. Then, if the deadlock is not broken Senator Penrose, as state chairman, will cast the deciding vote as an umpire under the state rules.

No Signs of Break.

There are no signs of a break in the senatorial Republican deadlock in the Northumberland-Snyder-Union district, although Senator B. K. Focht of Lewisburg, who now represents the district, insists that he will again be nominated. Focht has declined to attend the previous meetings of the conference, because he believes they were not regularly called and any nomination which might have been made would have been irregular.

His opponents are ex-Representative Fred C. Godcharles of Milton, and Dr. Percival Herman of Middleburg. Focht was here today in conference with his friends and said that the conference would meet in a short time. Charles B. Witmer of Shamokin, who is managing the campaign of Godcharles, has gone to the Yellowstone park and will return in ten days.

George F. Young, chairman of the Adams county Republican committee, has fixed August 27 for the Republican primaries, and the following Monday for the county convention. The only office for which there will be a contest is associate judge, for which two candidates will be nominated. Judge Samuel McC. Swope of Gettysburg will be renominated for president judge of the Adams-Fulton district. Representatives John R. Bittinger and Elisha A. Seabrook will also be renominated.

The nomination of Tillmore A. Maust of Carlisle for representative by Monday's Cumberland county Republican convention was a shrewd piece of politics and will undoubtedly strengthen the whole Republican ticket. Mr. Maust was an unsuccessful candidate for president judge against ex-Judge Wilbur F. Sadler, who was nominated on the first ballot, and it was thought his defeat would induce his friends to oppose the Republican ticket.

Sadler's friends in the convention proposed the name of Mr. Maust for representative, which office he held in 1895-6, and he was nominated by acclamation. He has since publicly accepted, and pledged himself to do all in his power for the election of the entire ticket. Representative H. J. Brinkerhoff was nominated and ex-Representative James L. Young was nominated for district attorney.

PARDONED TO GO HOME TO SEE AGED MOTHER

COLUMBUS, O., June 25—Twenty years ago Karl Mog, messenger in the state law library, left Bavaria in order to escape the military service. A fine was assessed against him and a term of imprisonment pronounced, effective should he ever be arrested on Bavarian soil. Recently Mog has been receiving many letters from his aged mother, asking him to return once before she dies. State authorities interested themselves in the case and Mog has just received a pardon signed by the king of Bavaria. He will leave to visit his parents next week.

Dayton Gets Next Convention.

AKRON, O., June 25.—Dayton gets the next convention of the Ohio Christian Endeavor society, the decision having been made at the business meeting this afternoon. The Rev. J. E. Fout of Fostoria was re-elected president; C. R. Hubbell of Columbus was re-elected field secretary and Claude Eckart of this city was re-elected secretary, Miss Mabel Fortune of Zanesville was re-elected statistical secretary and Vinton M. Pace of Cleveland treasurer.

SLOT MACHINES ACT AS BAROMETERS OF TRADE

Penny-in-the-slot machines are a barometer to the conditions of trade, according to an agent for a slot machine company that has 1,000 chewing gum machines in the towns on the Monongahela and Turtle Creek valleys. For several months they have fallen off in revenue, but for two weeks now they have been constantly increasing and the agent stated that nearly as many pennies are placed in the machines now as when the country was enjoying its greatest prosperity.

SAVING W. H. TAFT FOR FOUR YEARS

Ohio Hopes to Furnish Presidential Candidate in 1908.

J. B. FORAKER HAS AMBITION

Democratic Delegation to St. Lous Likely to Join in Stampede to Grover Cleveland If That Program Is Arranged—McLean in Control.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS TO THE GAZETTE.]

COLUMBUS, June 25.—The feature of the Republican national convention upon which the party leaders in Ohio are congratulating themselves most warmly is the fact that the boom of William H. Taft for the vice presidency amounted to practically nothing. Ohio, after her long experience in furnishing candidates for the national ticket, and of being generally recognized as a power in the national convention, does not find the back seat comfortable. The prominent Ohioans who have been attending conventions for the last 20 years found themselves less prominent than usual this year. They hope to have something to say next time. Hence, the moment Taft's name was mentioned in connection with the vice presidency they fought the suggestion.

Ohio is saving Taft for greater things. While four years is a long time, and although, before the next president's term is out, it may be Chief Justice Taft of the United States supreme court, it is undeniably the purpose today of the dominant Dick-Herrick organization leaders to push Taft in 1908 as Ohio's candidate for the presidency. He is regarded as the state's greatest politicat asset since the death of William McKinley and Marcus A. Hanna. He is the one man in Ohio today who, all the leaders agree, measures up to the presidential standard. He is being saved for the future.

Sidetracked by Herrick.

The Taft boom was neatly sidetracked by Gov. Herrick at Chicago, so far as the Ohio delegation was concerned, by his remark that Senator Foraker should be the man if any Ohioan were to be named for the second place on the ticket. Senator Foraker hopes himself to go to the next national convention with the Ohio delegation behind him. He is supposed to have been the real sponsor for the Taft boom, and when he saw that the faction which controlled seven-eights of the delegation would support him for the vice presidency this year, if an open fight were made for Taft, all talk of the latter's nomination was hushed.

The present situation in Ohio Republican politics might be termed a factional truce, were it not for the fact that the Herrick-Dick organization, built up and perfected by the late Senator Hanna, is so strong that it does not as yet feel the need of making terms with the old Foraker guard. Such concessions as its leaders have made have been solely in the interest of surface harmony in this presidential year. Both factions are enthusiastically for Roosevelt and Fairbanks and will work together to roll up the largest possible Republican plurality in November. Then will come the real tug of war for factional supremacy, with Senator Foraker, Senator Dick, Gov. Herrick and George B. Cox all aspiring to undisputed state leadership. If Senator Forraker can continue to beat Senator Dick in the distribution of federal patronage in the state, it is not unlikely that he will regain something of his old prestige within the next four years. Today he can command little strength, but the other faction has no one acknowledged leader, and the fight will be a hard and fair one.

McLean to Be the Angel.

The Democratic state executive committee has decided not to open the campaign in Ohio until September 1. Headquarters are now open in this city, in charge of Harvey C. Garber of Greenville, chairman of the committee, and literature will be sent out throughout the summer as soon as the St. Louis convention gives the committee the cue as to what this literature shall be about. But no speakers will be placed on the road until nine weeks before election day. Then the committee plans to conduct a sharp, aggressive campaign, with plenty of speakers and plenty of money. The fact that no shortage of funds is expected is significant of the fact that the old leaders are back in the saddle. John R. McLean's interest in Ohio politics has been revived and he will be re-elected national committeeman from Ohio. He will finance the campaign.

The Ohio delegation to the Democratic national convention is still entirely undecided as to whom it will support at St. Louis. There is absolutely no enthusiasm for Judge Parker, and the New York candidate can rely upon support from Ohio only in case his strength on the first few ballots indicates his nomination. Then, against their own will, the Ohio delegates will clamber into the band wagon. Their real sentiment is divided between Cleveland, Gray and Harmon, with a few scattering votes for Hearst, which cannot be delivered to him because the delegation is bound by the unit rule.

Judson Harmon's chances of holding his own delegation depend entirely upon his ability to win support from other states. Unless it develops that a dark horse is the probable winner, Harmon's name will not be presented. No fight will be made for him unless it soon becomes evident that none of the candidates now under discussion can win. But, if his name is presented, Ohio will vote solidly for him so long as there is the slightest possibility of his nomination. His backers assert that he will be able to command the votes of Kentucky and West Virginia from the first.

Dickering With Guffey.

The recent visit of Harlan Cleveland of Cincinnati, a gold Democrat and a member of the Ohio delegation, to Princeton has given color to the story that, if the opportunity is presented, the Ohio delegates will support Grover Cleveland, the uncle of Mr. Cleveland of Cincinnati. McLean, who is supposed to be dickering with Col. Guffey of Pennsylvania, Senator Gorman and Leader Murphy of Tammany Hall in the campaign against Parker, has said repeatedly that he is for Cleveland, and there is no doubt that the delegation has enough Cleveland men to control if the effort to stampede the convention is made.

McLean favors Cleveland because he considers him the only Democrat who would have the ghost of a chance to defeat Roosevelt, and there is no question that among the rank and file of the gold Democrats of Ohio, who now control the state organization, Cleveland is the most popular Democrat in the country. So, if there is an attempt to nominate the former president at St. Louis, it is highly probable that the Ohio men will be found doing what they can to help accomplish the coup. The delegates leave here next Saturday and a larger crowd of Ohio Democrats will attend the convention as spectators than in the last eight years. The party shows signs of getting together under the old leadership, and if the convention adopts a conservative platform and nominates a conservative candidate, Gov. Herrick's plurality of 113,000 will not be repeated in November. Senator Dick believes that Roosevelt's margin in Ohio will be about 50,000. Cleveland himself, who once came within 1,000 votes of carrying the state, could hardly cut it down to a lower figure than that. It is too near 1896.

There is a craze for erecting monu ments in Germany just now. The picture shows the enormous monument t o be erected near Leipzig in commemoration of the great battle in 1813.

DAWSON AND TETER CLAIM VICTORY

All West Virginia Delegates to State Convention Elected.

FIGURES GIVEN BY COUNTIES

Nomination of Roosevelt and Fairbanks Insures Republican Victory in the Mountain State—Majority to Be Over 30,000.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE GAZETTE.]

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., June 25.—The last county has held its convention for the nomination of delegates to the state Republican convention next month. This was Ritchie county, and was claimed by both the candidates, but when the primary was over and the votes counted it was found that Dawson had received 18 and Teter four delegates. It was considered the hardest battle in the entire contest and many were of the opinion that the delegation would be divided evenly, but such was not the case, and the result was, therefore, a surprise.

Following is a table of the delegates selected by the different counties furnished by Dawson followers:

	Dawson.	Teter.

This statement comes from the Dawson managers, but is considered by those standing on neutral ground to be very conservative in all respects. Mr. Dawson, they say, is claiming only that which he actually has and when the convention meets he will enter it followed by 546, who will see that he gets the nomination.

On the other hand, in talking the matter over with Maj. C. D. Elliott of this city this morning he stated in positive terms that Mr. Teter would receive the nomination in spite of the Dawson claims, that he already had enough votes to capture it, if not on the first ballot, then on the second and last. He gave no figures but stated that he knew whereof he spoke and the utterances he had made would be carried out to the letter at Wheeling. He stated that Mr. Dawson was losing ground every day, and many of the delegates would not vote for him, even though instructed, on account of a series of misrepresentations made along the line of tax reform. This may be a fact, as it is known that the Teter managers have something they are holding in reserve until the convention meets and which they claim will sweep the floor of all Teter opposition.

Dawson yesterday stated that he was safe and positively sure of being nominated. He said that nothing could turn the tide in favor of tax reform, which was on the increase in all directions and gaining ground very rapidly. Neither he nor his managers are worrying over the result of the convention and claim that Mr. Dawson will be nominated and then elected by a majority of more than 30,000.

Senator Stephen B. Elkins, who has been on a tour of the state in the interests of the Republican party and its success this fall, arrived in the city this morning and remained throughout the day and part of the evening. He was quartered at the Chancellor and during his short stay many of his friends and the leaders of the party called to see him. In the evening he was in consultation with several of the locals and a scheme is said to have been mapped out which will insure the greatest harmony at the state convention. The senator talked a little in general upon the situation and stated that he considered the party in better condition than ever and believed 30,000 majority could be rolled up with a united effort. Mr. Elkins left for his home at Elkins and from there he will go east on business.

While the Republicans of West Virginia desired to see the name of Senator S. B. Elkins on the national ticket, they are perfectly satisfied with the result of the big convention and nothing but perfect satisfaction rests throughout West Virginia. It is believed that Roosevelt will carry the state by a larger majority than President McKinley did on either occasion, for the reason that Mr. Roosevelt seems to be a man with ideas exactly in accord with the populace of this state and the greatest admiration is expressed by Republicans and Democrats alike for him and his record. The party will stand to him to a man and he will be able to control more Democratic West Virginia votes than any other man that could have been nominated.

S. H. Piersol, the leader of the Populist party in this state, arrived in the city this morning and in reply to a question concerning his part in the coming campaign made this statement: "No, the Populist party will not name a ticket in West Virginia this year. In fact, I am done with that sort of work, and the party as well as the object has been abandoned. When we failed to elect Bryan the Populists went to pieces and, while you see a man now and then who took an active part in this work, the majority of the members have returned to one or the other of the old-line parties and our work is finished."

ATTEMPT TO SAVE TRUST COMPANY

Prudential's Attorneys Ask Court to Stay Execution Issued Against It.

MRS. BENDINGER ACQUITTED

Heavy Sentences Imposed in Criminal Court—Father Who Assaulted His Daughter Gets Six Years—Exceptions Filed in Drury-Dowd Case.

Strong efforts were made yesterday before Judges Collier and Macfarlane in court of common pleas No. 1, to have the execution issued against the Prudential Trust Company stayed. Attorneys C. C. Dickey and Pier Dannals, for the plaintiff, opposed the stay, while Stone & Stone and Homer Castle supported the effort to save the company's effects from the sheriff.

After long arguments by the counsel Judge Collier asked Mr. Castle what was the character of the institution, and commenting said that feature had not been set forth in the papers. The attorney replied that it did a general trust company's business and Mr. Dickey supplemented with an explanation of the different powers of a trust company.

Mr. Castle then reminded the court that the sale was billed for next Wednesday. To this Judge Collier replied rather abruptly that the court could decide the matter at once. However, a moment later, the court announced that a decision would be given tomorrow morning.

"Not guilty, by reason of the defendant being insane at the time of the killing," was the verdict returned by the jury yesterday morning in the case of Mrs. Minnie Bendinger, charged with the murder of Mrs. Laura B. Rubright. The murder occurred on the afternoon of the last of April 16, this year, when Mrs. Rubright was shot in the head and almost instantly killed.

Jury Out All Night.

The jury was charged by Judge Rodgers at a night session of court Friday and retired about 10 o'clock. It is said that the verdict was reached after one ballot. When court convened, the tipstaff in charge of the jury notified the court that a verdict had been reached. The jury came into the court room and Mrs. Bendinger was brought from the jail. The verdict was then rendered and the defendant returned to the jail.

Attorneys Marron and Haymaker, counsel for the defendant, will make an effort to have her released at once, as there was no evidence produced at the trial to show that she is still insane.

A new trial has been refused in the suit of Joseph F. Bannon, a policeman, against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for damages for personal injuries. Bannon made an arrest on August 28, 1902, on the South Side. He took his prisoner to a patrol box near a fence along the company's property. A crowd of spectators climbed on the fence which fell and Bannon was hurt. He sued the company and recovered $1,000. The company asked for a new trial. Judge McClung, in refusing it, says that the spectators were trespassers; people had been allowed to gather there by the company; that the weakened condition of the fence was known and it was the company's business to keep the trespassers away.

Contract Cannot Be Enforced.

Judge McClung also decided the suit over the water supply at the city farm at Marshalsea. He ordered judgment entered for the city. The Federal Water Company secured a verdict for $6,138.18, subject to a point of law. Judge McClung decides that all contracts made by the city must be in strict conformity with law and be in writing. This contract was not made in the manner prescribed by the act of assembly and on this ground the contract cannot be enforced.

The same court filed a supplemental opinion in the controversy resulting from the Perrysville avenue improvement. Since the filing of that opinion it seems that the attention of the court has been called to the fact that the viewers had already assessed against the city for its share of the work $61,604 68. This sum the court thinks includes the cost of paving between the car tracks, and under this view of the case it is therefore decided to dismiss the exceptions to the board of viewers' report.

In criminal court some heavy sentences were imposed by Judges Frazer and Rodgers. Robert F. Fry and George Anderson were sentenced to serve eight years and three months in the penitentiary, having been convicted of robbing and torturing Henry Davidson of West Deer township, on December 2 last. When Anderson was sentenced he told the court he was not near the scene of the robbery when it occurred and claimed he did not know William Graham, one of the gang who turned state's evidence. The court told the defendant that if he could prove an alibi, it would be taken into consideration.

Matthew Dougherty was fined $50 and sent to the penitentiary for six years. He was convicted of assaulting his daughter, Mary. Dan Crawford was sent to the same institution for four years for an assault on Julia Crumble, a minor.

Sent to the Penitentiary.

William Royster, convicted of shooting Louis Solomon in the neck and arm, was sent to the penitentiary for three years.

Bridget Brennen was sent to the penitentiary for one year. She was convicted of stealing some rings in the East End.

T. J. Whaler and Mose Price were sent to the workhouse for 11 months. They pleaded guilty to entering a Baltimore & Ohio railroad car in Allegheny and stealing $560 worth of goods. Arch and Will Showalter, indicted with them, stood trial, were convicted and sentenced to one year in the workhouse.

William Fletcher, convicted of aggravated assault and battery on W. H. Boiden, was sent to the workhouse for eight months.

Barbara Thornton was sent to the workhouse for eight months. She pleaded guilty to the larceny of some rings. William Fenton, convicted of cutting Robert E. Lee, was given a like sentence.

The appeal from the decision of Judge Acheson of the United States circuit court to the United States supreme court, in the habeas corpus proceedings for the release of Lieut. R. W. Drury and Private John Dowd, was formally taken yesterday. The appeal is based on a long list of exceptions, filed by United States District Attorney Young, in which are alleged a number of errors on the part of the local court. The assignments of error were filed after consultation with United States Attorney General P. C. Knox. The final order and decree of Judge Acheson requires that the prisoners be remanded to the custody of the jail warden. They will remain out on bail.

ALMOST TOTAL FAILURE.

But Two Out of Twenty-Four Students on Preliminary Law Examination Pass.

The Allegheny county board of law examiners met yesterday and announced the result of the examination. Of the 28 applicants for final examination, 14 passed, nine of those failing having failed on the oral examination.

Two of the 24 applicants for the preliminary examination passed. Those to pass the final examination are: Jacob G. Crookston, G. E. Flaccus, J. G. Frazer, DeWitt Haber, W. W. Hamilton, R. W. Martin, J. A. Metz, P. H. McQuire, C. D. Scully, Simon Sher, R. L. Smith, R. W. Sutton, J. F. Tim and H. V. Wolf. Of the preliminaries A. L. Goldstrom and S. M. Hazlett passed.

The committee contends the preliminary examination was fair and that any boy of 17 should have made the requisite percentage. However, this record for failures has never been equalled, and the boys say some of the papers went beyond the scope of anything ever given. The members of the committee are: J. M. Shields, C. C. Dickey, E. C. Chalfant, C. W. Jones, C. P. Orr, E. B. Scull, M. W. Acheson and Richard Kennedy.

Moral character will have as much to do with boys being registered and admitted to the bar, as mental qualification hereafter. The committee will carefully inquire into the applicant's fitness for registration and admission. He must be a gentleman and this will be construed strictly. A sense of his responsibility to attorneys and to his clients will have to be understood, and he must know what fairness means in all that the word implies. Not merely the honesty that requires him to pay dollar for dollar, but the integrity that requires him to take no advantage that he would not have a fellow-member take against him.

LEGAL BRIEFS.

Anton Blatz, late of McKees Rocks, leaves a $26,000 estate to his wife, Mary.

Judge Brown yesterday heard arguments in the suit of Frank Donner against W. H. Donner for an accounting.

Adam Wombacher has sued C. E. Lappe for $10,000 damages, alleging the defendant charged him with larceny by bailee, the grand jury ignoring the bill.

Emma L. Hunter, late of West Liberty, leaves a $4,500 estate to her sister, Sarah A. Bankard, with the request that the sister leaves the estate to charity at her death.

George V. Fritchle has entered a libel in divorce against Louisa Fritchle, alleging his wife was married to Frank Fisher in 1888; that he is still living and that no divorce was ever secured.

Beulah Davis, a negress of Rankin, was held for trial in the United States district court on a charge of mailing an improper letter. The evidence shows that the letter was written by Francis Triplett to Mrs. Anna Fox.

Mary J. Walls, alias Mille Walls, late of Pittsburgh, leaves her entire estate, with the exception of $10 each to Dr. C. C. Meredith and Dr. George H. Vaux, to her daughter, Lizzie Holmes. The estate is said to be large.

The following executions were issued yesterday: Morris Forst Co. vs. George Turner, $1,014.58; Lawrence Bastable et al. vs. Oliver W. Rafferty, $692.56; Joseph G. Chettle vs. Frank Feld, $237.80; J. S. Scoby & Co., agent, vs. Charles Beck, $20.

William Grant, Lou Grant and George McKee have begun habeas corpus proceedings for their release from jail. They were committed on a charge of larceny by Alderman Walsh, who, it is alleged, owned the property in question and therefore lacked jurisdiction.

Mrs. Maggie Gaertner, wife of Dr. Frederick Gaertner, through her attorneys, Hudson & Howley, has taken an appeal to the supreme court in the case of David Hunter against A. H. Baxter, et al., in which the title to property on South Negley avenue is involved.

Charles Smith, the stable boss for the Pittsburgh Provision Company, was granted an appeal from the decision of Alderman Barton. Smith was sued by P. L. King, agent for the Anti-Cruelty society, for working a horse which was said to have been in poor condition. He was fined $10 and costs.

William Sarber and wife, Margaretta, have sued the city of Allegheny and Mrs. T. W. Symons for $30,000 damages each. It is alleged the wife fell over a cellar door of the individual defendant, at Lacock and Federal streets, and broke her hip. The cellar entrance, it is alleged, projected to an unsafe extent.

In the habeas corpus proceedings instituted by Mary Trout against the city of Pittsburgh to recover possession of her child, J. W. Clark, director of charities, has filed answer, asserting the woman is not a fit person to have the custody of the child. It was taken by the department because of her neglect, and has since been placed in a good home.

John Wallace, late of Pittsburgh, directs that his son, John M. Wallace, be charged with $29,189.80 and Mary B. Batchelor, the decedent's daughter, with mortgages, etc., already received, and then that the estate be equally divided between them, with the provision that the daughter is to have 285-1000 of an acre of the Snowden township farm in excess of her share.

Fifteen hotel keepers had applications for the transfer of their liquor licenses, and all but two were refused. The license of the Crozier house, at Port Pitt, the proprietor having died, and the license of the Anderson house, at Seward, the hotel having moved to a new location, were the successful applicants. The applications were filed some time ago and the court has since had the papers.

Charles C. Coates presented an application asking that he be appointed burgess of Haysville borough to fill the unexpired term of William P. Bedell, who resigned. The court took the papers and will render a decision later. The same action was taken with the application of Robert Batch, who is an aspirant for the position of constable of Munhall borough. The vacancy was caused by the resignation of Joseph Boughamer.

Libels in divorce were: Hannah Rotman against Benjamin Rotman and Caroline Geeting against Henry F. V. Geeting, both charging infidelity; Nellie Miller against William Miller, Elizabeth Carraher against Frank Carraher, and John F. Eggers against Ellen M. Eggers, alleging desertion; Joseph Blair against Elizabeth L. Blair, alleging impotency, and Eliza Thompson against Thomas H. Thompson, alleging cruel and barbarous treatment.

ATTRACTIONS COMING ON TWO BIG SPECIAL TRAINS

JOSEPH FERARI. FRANCIS FERARI.

The Ferari Brothers show will arrive in two sections over the Pennsylvania railroad and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie this morning to the Wabash park, end of the Smithfield street bridge, South First and Carson streets. This aggregation will fill a two weeks' engagement with the building trades council festival and carnival, which opens tomorrow evening and closes July 9.

Wabash park is ready and the electric light company has completed the poles for the arc lights and stringing wire for the electric fronts. Speedy, the high diver, will have a tower of light 125 feet high, which will make a pretty spectacle at night. Comet, the shooting comet, in his mad dash down the 96-foot ladder on a bicycle, will ride down an electric path two feet wide. Cooper, the aerial cycle wonder, will also have his wheel in a blaze of light.

The feature is the trained wild animal arena which is said to contain over 200 wild beasts. The show carries the largest portable steel arena in the world.

BIGELOW PROPOSES TO CREATE METER BUREAU

Ordinance Provides for Annual Payroll of Nearly $40,000.

Director Bigelow proposes to establish a new bureau in his department to instal meters throughout the city, and the ordinance introduced in common council Thursday night provides for an annual payroll for this purpose of upwards of $40,000, the money to come out of the filtration bond issue. The money for the purchase of these meters, upwards of $1,000,000, will also come out of the same fund.

The payroll provided for in Bigelow's ordinance shows that there will be some fat jobs for faithful political workers.

The bill authorizes the employment of the following: One assistant engineer, $166 66 a month; assistant engineer, $125; three draughtsmen, each $100; three clerks, each $75; general foreman, $125; assistant foreman, $80; chief inspector, $100.

The director is also authorized to hire as many other assistants as he may need at $2 50 a day. It is estimated that at least 25 men will be required to put in the meters. With but 25 additional assistants the payroll for the year will be $32,200.

MARRIAGE THEME IS AGAIN REVIVED

Cornell President Says Graduates Should Assume Wedded Responsibilities.

INDORSED BY THE MINISTERS

New York Preachers Also Urge Young Men to Become Benedicts—May Start a Boom in the Matrimonial Market. Gossip of Gotham.

THE PITTSBURGH GAZETTE BUREAU,
Herald Building, Herald Square.
NEW YORK, June 25.

That most fascinating of subjects, marriage, has come bravely to the fore again. President Schurmann of Cornell university told the graduates that young men should marry and assume the responsibilities of life as soon as possible after leaving college, and several preachers in New York city have indorsed his words in no uncertain terms. It has long been a complaint in New York that young men do not marry early. It is said against them that they like to live a selfish bachelor life and failing in their duty as American citizens in a way which has been specifically condemned by the president of the United States as well as by the president of Cornell university.

It is possible that the agitation now may lead to a boom in the marriage market, although it is by no means certain. Most assuredly, everyone is talking about the desirability of matrimony for young men, and the ministers who have been interviewed on the subject have expressed themselves in a way that can hardly be disregarded by the average college man. As for the maidens of the metropolis, modesty may prevent their saying as much about it as they think. Most of them take the high ground that the young men should know what they want, and that if they are not anxious to possess nice girls for wives it is their loss—that is, the young men's.

Dr. Slicer, pastor of the Madison Avenue Unitarian church, who is a plain-spoken man, both in the pulpit and in print, is quoted as saying: "The religious hermit and the bachelor hermit are not very different. Both are abnormalities. The family is the unit about which municipalities grow." There have been other public utterances on the subject, and all are along practically the same line. The bachelor graduate must go.

Clinging to the Old Name.

It is a question whether Longacre square will become "Times square" after all. The objection raised to the change by old New Yorkers, who want the historic old name retained, gets fiercer as time passes. If the name of the square should be changed it will be in the face of bitter opposition.

Pleasure of Roof Garden Dinners.

Roof-garden dining halls are the most delightful places in which to take dinner on these warm evenings. Most of them have covers, but some are open to the sky. They came into fashion intermittently a few years ago, but nowadays all the new hotels are furnished with conveniences for meals on top of the house. The kitchen is up there, so that the smell of the cooking does not offend the rest of the house, and the waiters bustle about with all the more agility because they are in a cool atmosphere and enjoy the conditions as much as the guests.

It would be impossible to imagine anything more delightful than to sit on top of one of the skyscrapers with a congenial companion, while taking dinner, with all the city spread out below and a view of the harbor and rivers as part of the pleasure.

"Animal King" Pleased Dowie.

Frank C. Bostock, the "animal king," had to share interest with Dowie, the "prophet," when he came up the bay on the Lucania today. Bostock and Dowie had met in the course of the trip as fellow voyagers, and "Elijah III." was much interested in the anecdotes of wild animals which Mr. Bostock relates with such convincing simplicity when he is in the humor. On the other hand, the "animal king" seemed to be pleased with Dowie, whom he pronounced a bright man and an earnest one.

New Location for Cox Statue.

It has been decided to place the statue of S. S. Cox in Abingdon square, which is a triangular plot of ground at Eighth avenue and Tenth street. The statue has been at Astor place for many years, but has been removed to make way for subway improvements. The figure has an uplifted finger, and as it faced the trolley lines at the busy corner, it has been known as "Stop-the-Car Cox." It will exercise the same duty of stopping the car at Eighth avenue when it gets into its new place.

Quicker Ride to Coney.

It must be confessed that the problem of getting to and fro from Coney island easily has been well solved for Manhattaners. You take an express train on the bridge at Park row, and for 10 cents you ride all the way to Coney island without change. The running time is 36 minutes. It used to take at least an hour to make the journey. Of course, you may go on the boat there and back for 25 cents, but if you want to get there quickly, and at the lowest possible cost, why take the "L" at 20 cents the round trip.

Pathetic Home-Coming.

One of the many pathetic scenes in connection with the wreck of the General Slocum took place on board the Lucania when she reached quarantine. No one on board had heard of the disaster up to that time. One of the first men to climb the side of the ship from the revenue cutter was John Reinfrank, who met his two sisters and told them that both their parents had perished. It was a pitiful meeting, and the two young women were completely overcome, but bore up bravely after a while. They had expected to meet both father and mother at the pier. It would have been possible to transmit the news by wireless telegraphy, perhaps, but it was considered more merciful to withhold the news until the last possible moment.

Loss to Educational Interests.

When the news went forth that Henry A. Rogers, president of the New York board of education, had died suddenly this morning, it gave a fearful shock to everybody. He was one of the best known men in the city, and was generally loved and respected. He was a millionaire merchant and took charge of the work of education because he liked it. The cause of his death was pneumonia. All the school flags were lowered to half mast and all schools will be closed from 9 o'clock to noon.

Not an Easy Job.

It is not so easy a job to erect the eight great granite columns on the pedestals of the choir as the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Cathedral heights (commonly known as Morningside heights), as was expected, for each column weighs 90 tons and the engine used for hoisting gave out this morning. Work will be resumed on Monday morning with increased power. It will be long before the whole eight columns are in place, which is not strange considering their great weight and size. The completed cathedral is intended to be one of the most imposing in the world.

Should Emulate a Baseball Player.

A Harlem High school has been told to take particular notice of "Joe" McGinnity, one of the crack pitchers of the New York National league baseball team, and try to emulate him in his self-reliance and persistence. McGinnity is known as the "Iron Man." He has won 12 baseball games in succession, and Dr. Jerre F. Forbes, in an address to the DeWitt Clinton High school, advised all the young men to do with all their might that which came to them as a duty, just as the "Iron Man" played baseball.

GEORGE C. JENKS.

MUMMIFIED BODY FOUND CLUTCHING A BIBLE

GLENDIVE, MONT., June 25.—W. B. Foster, coroner of Dawson county, returned today from Thompson Creek, about 90 miles northwest from Glendive, where he had been called by the finding of the body of Thoma McWilliams, who perished in a blizzard last March. McWilliams' mummified body, enveloped in the coat he wore when he left Bar-U ranch, was discovered by a boy herding sheep. He was religious in life and in death the skeleton fingers were found clutching a Bible.

Chickasaw Chief Fatally Hurt.

ARDMORE, I. T., June 25.—E. M. Harris, ex-governor of the Chickasaw nation, was severely, if not fatally, hurt by being thrown from his horse and striking against a tree. He has been unconscious for several hours. He is one of the best-known men in the territory.

A Dutch Treat is an old saying meaning that you receive the exact equivalent of what is given. When you buy an EDISON PHONOGRAPH you get a double Dutch treat. It is clear in tone and reproduces the human voice perfectly.

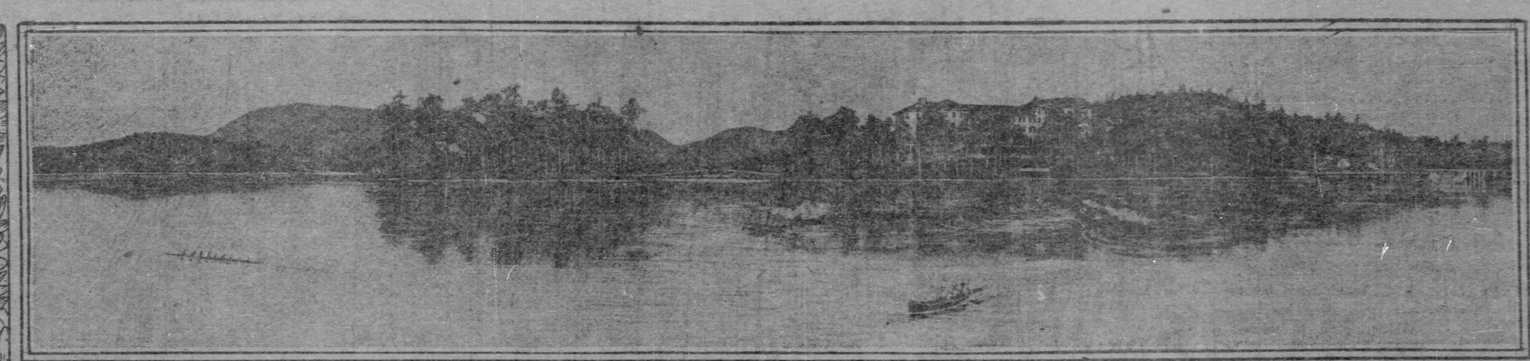
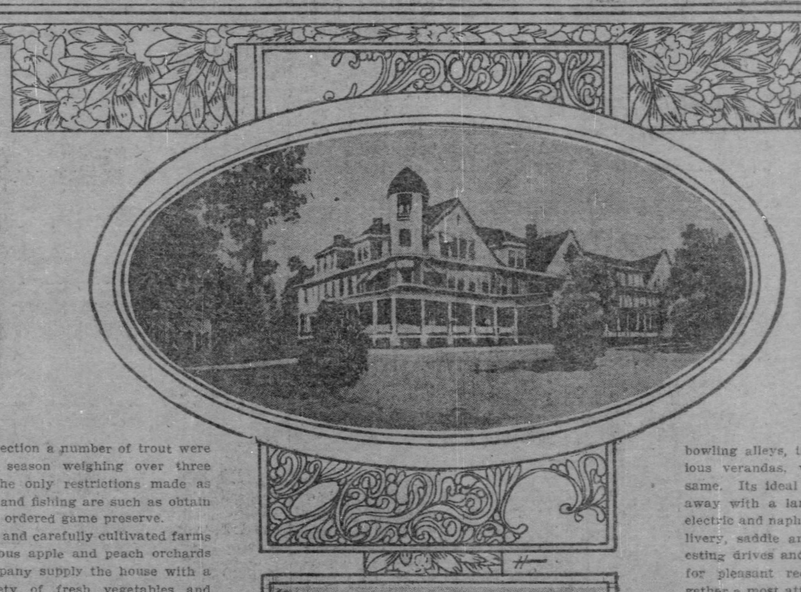
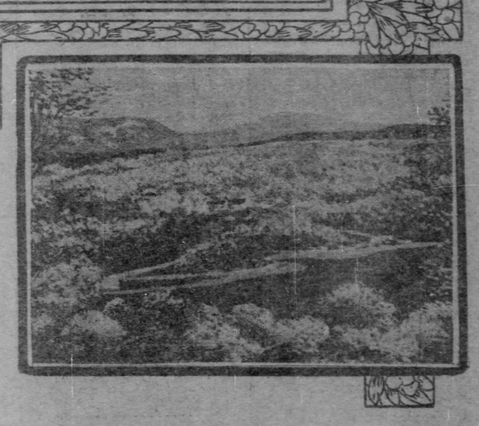
Leading Summer Resort Hotels

The Beautiful Sapphire Country.

A Retreat for Health and Recreation







SCENES OF Lake Toxaway, Toxaway, Fairfield, Lodge, Franklin and Sapphire Inns, in Sapphire and Brevard, N. C.

When the agencies and conveniences of nature brought forth from the abyss of chaos that section of North Carolina now called the Sapphire country, she showered upon this one spot every mark of beauty that her forces could convey. No limner's pencil nor poet's pen could adequately picture the many magnificent scenes of nature's architecture that are so profusely displayed in and about Sapphire's realm. To the searcher for health or recreation, the forester, botanist or geologist the country about Sapphire is a veritable storehouse of wonders. Here is truly the forest primeval. In the spring and early summer hundreds of bright-colored flowers light up the old woods, here the rhododendron grows to a height of 30 feet, the air is fragrant with perfume, and the old hills hold well their secret of treasures of wealth yet to be uncovered. The entire globe offers no greater natural sanitarium than there, where every breath, charged with ozone, develops pounds of energy, and where all conditions for perfect health exist in the highest degree. It is the ideal resort for hay fever sufferers, the disease yielding in a marvelously brief period to the beneficent influence of the mild, equable temperature and dry atmospheric conditions prevailing there. The springs furnishing the various hotels of the Toxaway Company with water are absolutely pure. On the very hottest day in summer the thermometer never registers above 87 degrees, while a record of the temperature kept at Sapphire for the past four years shows but an average of 69 degrees for the entire summer.

Sapphire is reached over the Southern Railway to Hendersonville, thence over the Transylvania railroad to Lake Toxaway. The drive from Lake Toxaway to Sapphire, a distance of six miles, is over the new Sapphire turnpike, a perfect road, making the drive one of ease and pleasure, with grand forest and mountain scenery. The town of Brevard, N. C., is the gateway of the beautiful Sapphire country. It has an altitude of 2,250 feet, is 40 miles from Asheville, N. C., and is one of the most enterprising towns of the state, owing to the impetus given it by the Transylvania railroad and the Toxaway Hotel Company.

The estate connected with the hotels of the Toxaway Company contains about 20,000 acres. On this estate there are five large and modern hotels. They are as follows: The New Toxaway Inn at Lake Toxaway; the Franklin, at Brevard; the Lodge, on Mount Toxaway, Sapphire; the Fairfield Inn, on Lake Fairfield, Sapphire, and the Sapphire Inn, on Lake Sapphire, Sapphire, N. C.

The estate at Sapphire is well stocked with various kinds of game. The trout fishing is unexcelled, the hatchery connected with the estate supplying 250,000 trout to the streams and lakes yearly. There are 75 miles of river and brook fishing, which have been under careful patrol for several years, and as a result of this protection a number of trout were taken last season weighing over three pounds. The only restrictions made as to hunting and fishing are such as obtain in any well ordered game preserve.

The large and carefully cultivated farms and numerous apple and peach orchards of the company supply the house with a great variety of fresh vegetables and fruits. On the extensive pasture lands of the company graze numerous flocks of sheep and herds of cattle, the latter being selected with a view to their excellence for the dairy, which supplies fresh milk and cream in abundance at all times.

Many miles of road have been graded around the margins of the lakes and over the property with a due regard for views which cannot well be surpassed for beauty and grandeur. There are so many pleasant trips to be enjoyed at the resorts in the Sapphire country that only a personal visit can adequately portray the beauties and infinite varieties of this region. Within a radius of 10 miles of Sapphire are 50 waterfalls, all of them being easily accessible. These falls range in height from 50 to 370 feet.

The Toxaway Inn, on Lake Toxaway, which was opened to the public last year, is conceded by all who visited it to be one of the best equipped and most modern resort hotels to be found in the south, having elevators, steam heat, electric lights, etc., more than 100 rooms en suite with private baths, pool and billiard rooms, bowling alleys, tennis courts, large spacious verandas, with open fireplaces on same. Its ideal situation on Lake Toxaway with a large livery of row boats, electric and naphtha launches, good stable livery, saddle and driving horses, interesting drives and numerous opportunities for pleasant recreation, make it altogether a most attractive place of resort.

Fairfield Inn is beautifully situated on the shores of Lake Fairfield. It is a modern house in every respect, with excellent water supply, good baths, electric lights, etc. It has wide, spacious porches and commodious public rooms, while beautiful grounds and parks, delightful boating and bathing, serpentine drives and shady walks around and about the lake make this an ideal place for health and pleasure seekers.

The Franklin is built on the highest point in Brevard, overlooking the French Broad river and valley, in the midst of a park of 80 acres. No expense has been spared in its appointments and furnishing, which are second to none in the south. Every room is an outside one, each commanding a magnificent view of mountain and valley scenery. A great many rooms are en suite with private bath, fine porcelain-lined tubs and open plumbing. The entire sanitary arrangements are perfect, while the water supply is piped direct to the hotel from pure mountain springs. The large truck farm, under the care of experienced gardeners, supplies the hotel with fresh vegetables each day.

On the summit of Mt. Toxaway is the Lodge. The house is easily accessible from either of the lake houses by a nicely constructed and well graded road, winding back and forth along the sides of the mountain for a distance of about three and one-half miles. The accommodations provided here for guests are of the most satisfactory character.

There are good stables in connection, making the place especially attractive for mountain parties. The view from this Lodge, which is on the extreme summit of the mountain, is the most extensive (it being an isolated peak) of any mountain point of vantage in North Carolina, probably in the Allegheny chain. The magnificent character of this view baffles description. Its grandeur and sublimity can only be fully appreciated by those who have seen it in person and who have felt the soothing yet inspiring influence, the silent but irresistible power of its matchless beauty.

Other places have their charms for some, but few, indeed, are those who visit the Sapphire country and do not find in it some rare attraction that induces them to linger here longer than they had at first intended, and on returning pay a more extended visit to this most delightful section of West North Carolina.

The Sapphire Inn, open the year round, with cottages, will accommodate 50 guests. The grounds are spacious and well kept. There is an excellent livery in connection with the house, and a number of pleasure boats have been placed on Sapphire lake for the use of the guests. The fishing on this lake is unsurpassed. Good tennis courts and golf links in connection with this house.

The lakes in the Sapphire country are perfectly charming. All who visit these lakes are impressed with the wonderful beauty and greatly varied character of the scenery. There are towering cliffs, rising abruptly for a thousand feet from their shores, and cascades of rare beauty falling directly into the lakes from the lofty table-land surrounding. Indeed it is the general verdict of widely traveled people that, in respect to the remarkable combination and varied and attractive character of lake and mountain scenery, this section is unrivaled by any in the world. Certainly no other part of America has anything to equal it.

The Transylvania Railroad Company having extended their line last year to Lake Toxaway, N. C., guests for Toxaway Inn are now able to reach that house from a private station on the hotel grounds. Guests for Sapphire and Fairfield Inns will find good conveyances at the station awaiting all trains. A first-class train service will be operated between Hendersonville and Lake Toxaway, making close connections at Hendersonville with all through trains of the Southern Railway Company. Stop-over privileges allowed at Brevard on all tickets reading to Lake Toxaway, N. C.

MMENCEMENTS END WITH GLORY

Wind-Up of a Very Brilliant School and College Season.

GOOD RECORDS ARE MADE

Pittsburgh High School Graduates 217 Students, While Over 1,200 Are Candidates for Admission Therein—Social Life at the California Normal.

The windup of the commencement season was in the proverbial blaze of glory and will doubtless linger long in the memory of the participants. The annual commencement of the Pittsburgh high school on Thursday evening aptly illustrated the great popularity of the public school system in Pittsburgh. It was a proud occasion for Supt. Samuel Andrews, Director Rynearson, President D. L. Gillespie, of the Central board of education, and other officials as well as for the graduates themselves and their parents and friends, who filled Carnegie Music hall to overflowing. Those leaving the high school at this commencement numbered 217 in all, 92 in the academic, 77 in the commercial and 48 in the normal department, but over 1,200 have successfully passed a thorough examination for admission next fall. Where to place them is the problem confronting the central board with the new high school wrangle still going on and no progress made in providing increased accommodations, which have been imperatively demanded for many years. In presenting the diplomas to the class Director Edward Rynearson said:

The keynote of educational thought has been given by Dr. John Dewey—"The school is not a preparation for life; it is life." During the past 10 or 12 years you have acted your part, guided and promoted by parents and teachers. You have not been merely consumers, idlers. You are an investment. If you accept the privileges but reject the obligations you are burdens, you are objects of misplaced charity. Give to the world a richer, stronger life as payment for the risk. Whenever you look to the past as the growing period of your lives then be sure that you are getting old, that you are decaying. Grow, then, as long as you live.

The first honor in the academical department was awarded to Miss Sadie Mathilde Soffel and the second to Henry Raven Gilbert. Miss Bessie Hartman Specht took the first honor in the normal department and Miss Jane Colvin Martin took the second. Thus three out of four honors went to girls, and a spectator was heard to say this was because the boys paid more attention to sports than to intellectual development.

Honors to the Schools.

In the examinations for admission to the high school, the largest class, 100, comes from the Liberty sub-district, (Twentieth ward.) The number passing in each district, including those entitled to re-examination in one branch, arranged for convenient reference, was as follows:

Allen 29, Bedford 18, Beltzhoover 17, Birmingham 18, Brushton 24, Colfax 28, Duquesne 3, Forbes 20, Franklin 21, Grant 30, Hancock 18, Hiland 11, Homewood 28, Howard 25, Humboldt 17, Knox 5, Lawrence 16, Liberty 100, Lincoln 73, Lockey 36, Minersville 41, Monongahela 2, Moorhead 58, Morse 21, Mt. Albion 40, Mt. Washington 44, North 12, Oakland 72, O'Hara 5, Peebles 60, Ralston 11, Riverside 6, South 14, Springfield 7, Sterrett 33, St. Clair 31, Thad Stevens 19, Washington 50, Wickersham 13.

At the commencement of the State Normal school at California, Pa., last Wednesday many visitors were impressed with the admirable system of government prevailing there. The authorities seem to act on the principle that he governs best who seems to govern least. Freedom and privilege were everywhere in evidence, but in no case was any abuse of freedom and privilege observed. Time was in the early days of the institution, when the famous "Rule 12th" was rigidly enforced, and under which a young man, now a prominent Pittsburgh business man and ex-county official, was publicly expelled for the heinous offence of accompanying a young woman to the commencement exercises where he met his doom. The attendance at parties was considered a species of total depravity. Now all is different. In speaking of the social life and other features of the school, Dr. Theo. B. Noss, the principal, said:

Education without social culture is incomplete, and none stand more in need of refined tastes and polite manners than the teacher. Every public school should have a teacher with a well reformed mind, refined manners and a pure life. Ample opportunities for social culture are given in the school. Through the fall and winter terms, receptions and sociables are frequently held. These are attended by students and teachers, and the aim is to blend instruction with entertainment, and to cultivate that ease of manner, and at the same time that becoming reserve which should characterize the associations of ladies and gentlemen.

Throughout the entire life of the school the relations between teachers and students are so friendly and natural that it never escapes the notice of visitors. There is no constraint that is thought of as such. In like manner, students show toward each other a helpful spirit. New students are met at the station when they arrive, and are made to "feel at home" from the first.

Hundreds Are Teaching.

There are now 1,357 California alumni. Most of them are, of course, teachers in the public schools, but they also represent bench and bar, pulpit and rostrum, and are found in the laboratory, the mart, the camp and the halls of congress. Hundreds are teaching in Allegheny county and vicinity.

The absurdity of having local school boards consist of an even instead of an odd number of members is again illustrated in the scores of deadlocks now on throughout the state. In a recent report to the legislature Dr. Nathan C. Schaeffer, state superintendent of public instruction, has the following on the subject:

The frequent deadlocks in the election of teachers and the selection of text books has raised the question whether it would not be wise to reduce the number of directors in townships from six to five. The tendency of the age is to concentrate power and responsibility. Provisional and professional certificates are granted by one officer, the superintendent, and this power is seldom abused because responsibility can be located. The committee on permanent certificates was diminished from five to three. This has worked well in practice. If the number of directors were reduced from six to five, teachers would be selected promptly; fewer factional contests would arise; the person failing of election could seek a school elsewhere, and the prompt decision of school questions would promote rather than hinder progress. The only thing to be said in favor of six directors is that two are elected every year for a full term and a two-thirds vote is required to constitute a majority on important questions. In favor of school boards of five it can be said that we would thereby avoid the expense of removing directors by process of law. All school questions should be decided speedily, without expense and with as little rancor as possible.

Lynch Lost His Own Game in Ninth Inning, but Proved Himself to Be a Star Pitcher

PITCHER LYNCH LOST HIS GAME

Twirled Magnificent Ball, but His Wild Throw in the Ninth Gave Colts Victory.

IS SURE ENOUGH STAR

"It was a tough game to lose," was an expression given voice to by almost every one of the 8,190 spectators as they filed out of Exposition park at 4:45 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The victory over the Pirates had been carried off by the Chicago Colts 2 to 0, after one of the most stubborn baseball battles seen at the park this season, and while the crowd regretted the defeat, yet it was satisfied in the belief that the Pirates have secured in Pitcher Lynch a star of the purest type.

It was Lynch's first appearance in the box before a home crowd, and so much has been said and written about the college boy that the fans were on the tip toe of expectation. It was a hard task for a young college pitcher having his second try out in the National league, but Lynch showed that he is there with the pitching goods all right and that Barney Dreyfuss made no mistake when he worked day and night to secure his services, which were in demand by nearly every other club in both leagues. It was expected that Lynch would show a nervousness under the conditions, but to the delight of the experts this was missing, and the young man conducted himself with all the ease of an old-timer.

Lynch is a tall, well-built fellow, and looks the part of an athlete. As a pitcher he is all that has been claimed for him, and then some. He has everything that a star pitcher should have, which includes speed, curves, control, a cool head and a slow ball which he uses to good advantage whenever he thinks it will do the most good. His work was so clever and clean-cut yesterday that the crowd tendered him a small-sized ovation at the conclusion of almost every inning, and even in the ninth, after the visitors had scored the two runs which won the game, the grandstand spectators arose, and as the pitcher walked to the bench cheered him to the echo.

It was too bad, after pitching such a magnificent game, that Lynch should be the man to bring about his own downfall, but such is the case, and after all it is what is called baseball luck. For eight innings the college boy had gone along holding the visiting batsmen practically in the palm of his hands, and the sum total of their attempts at the ball was two hits, a two-bagger in the fourth by Slagle and a single in the seventh by Williams, this latter hit being of a very scratchy order. In the fourth the visitors, by reason of their two-bagger and a base on balls to Casey, had become dangerous, but Lynch retired the part of the Pirates kept a run from being scored.

Slagle, who was the first batter in the ninth, poked out a little single to left, and Casey, the next batter, attempted to sacrifice him to second. Casey's bunt was a pretty one which Lynch, Leach and Smith went after and any one of them could have secured, but Lynch got the ball and had to make a quick throw to Smith, but drive wide the ball, but his aim was bad, and the ball went to right field, allowing Slagle to score and Casey to reach third. At this stage of the game Catcher Smith had to do the strong arm act, and in an attempt to catch Casey off third base, but Evers' throw was right into Casey's hands, and Beau was out.

As a rule, umpires are greeted with hoots and jeers, but when Chief Zimmer walked on the field yesterday he was received with applause and cheers, which were kept up until the chief had to doff his cap half a dozen times.

Ritchey's three-bagger in the eighth inning was a long drive down into deep right field, which McCarthy and Jones chased, and both attempted to get under it, but it fell short for the ball. Ritchey made a long slide for the plate, but the ball was ahead of him.

The ovation tendered to Pitcher Lynch when he walked to the players' bench in the ninth inning even after he had made the bad throw which gave his opponents the game was a thing seldom witnessed at a ball park. The people were so taken with his grand display of pitching that they were willing to forgive his mistake, even though it did cost the game.

Notes of the Game.

Tommy Leach put up a grand game at third base and many of his stops and throws were of the sensational order.

"Give the boy a chance," yelled Clarke from left field when chief Zimmer failed to call a strike on a slow ball that was right over the plate, but a trifle high.

There was a slight downfall of rain in the sixth inning, and quite a number of the occupants of the open seats sought shelter, but the storm soon passed away.

"Shorty" Slagle was as busy as a bunch of flies about a sugar barrel and some of the plays he made in left field for the Colts helped to save the game for that team.

Clancy Ritchey drew a round of applause in the fourth inning when he chased to second base, gathered in Jones' lively grounder and shot the ball to first ahead of the runner.

In the first inning Beaumont tried to move from second to third when Evers grabbed Wagner's fly ball back of first base, but Evers' throw was right into Casey's hands, and Beau was out.

Manager Clarke took all of his players with him last night, with the exception of Bransfield, who has a sore finger. Either Ernest Diehl or Carish will play first base at Chicago.

Hankard is expected to report at Chicago tomorrow. Kruger will rejoin the team at the same time. The pitching will be done by Miller, Flaherty and Lynch, as Phillippe is still at Cambridge Springs and Leever has a sore arm.

There was a disposition on the part of some of the fans last night to blame the loss of yesterday's game on Carish, who played first base, and it was asserted that had Bransfield been in his regular position the throw made by Pitcher Lynch in the ninth inning would at least have been stopped. Those who were close enough to the base to see the play assert that Carish became muddled and was so much afraid of the base runner that he made no effort to stop the ball.

The fine showing made by Lynch was the sole subject of discussion among the fans and the general verdict is that in him the Pirates have secured a star of the Mathewson type.

Four Hits Off Each Pitcher.

BUTLER, PA., June 25.—Zeleinople defeated Butler here today in one of the prettiest games of the season. Both pitchers were at their best, each team scoring but four hits, and Cavanaugh striking out 10 men of the home team. Features of the game were the fine catches made by Ramsey and Clark. Score:

Adams Wins His Game.

Oakdale High school defeated McDonald High school at McDonald. Adams allowed his opponents but three hits and struck out 11 men. his work in the box being the main feature of the game, although his support at times was of the sensational order. Consecutive hitting in the eighth inning scored three runs for Oakdale, winning the game. Steele's umpiring was without a flaw. Score:

CINCINNATI, June 25.—Corbett was easy for the locals today, all but one of the hits made off him being clean drives. PIRATES HAVE HARD SERIES WITH COLTS

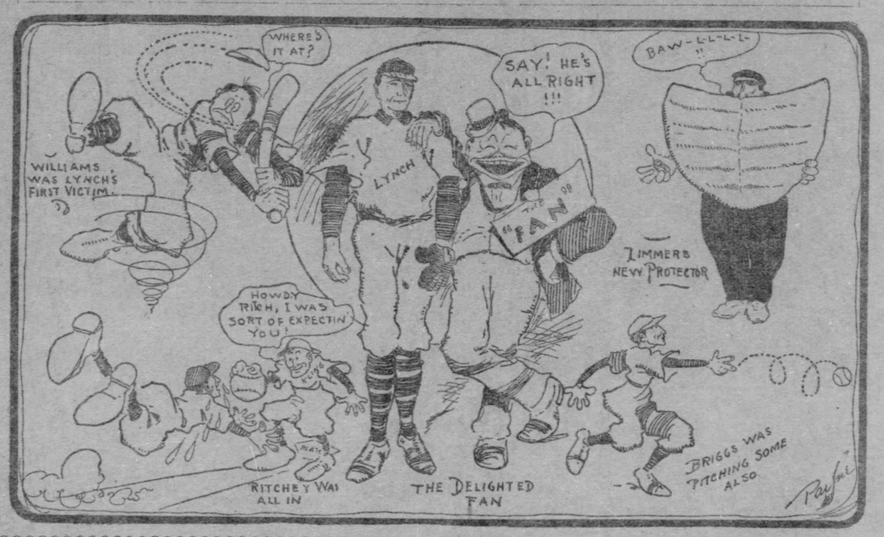
Teams Left for Chicago and Will Play Today—Carisch Blamed for That Defeat.

The Pittsburgh team left last night for Chicago and will not be seen at Exposition park again until next Friday afternoon, when it will tackle Cincinnati here. Three games will be played at Chicago. On next Wednesday the champions will play an exhibition game with Marty Hogan's team at Youngstown, O. On Thursday Pittsburgh will play its annual game at Steel Works park, Homestead. In all probability these will be the only exhibition games in which the champions will appear this season and President Dreyfuss has issued orders that all the regulars who are in shape to do so must take part in these contests. Lew Moren is slated to pitch against the Pirates and will undertake to beat them.

ONE PIRATE DEFEAT THAT BROUGHT NO DISGRACE



WAGNER STILL LEADS LEAGUE

Steinfeldt and Grady Are Tied With Him, but Have Been in a Less Number of Games.

WHAT THE FIGURES SHOW

Wagner still retains the lead in the batting in the league race. Grady and Steinfeldt are now tied for first place, but, as neither have played in the number of games the champions' great hitter has, he is given the credit of leading. Wagner not only leads the league in batting, but he also leads in doubles, total bases and stolen bases, having passed Shay in the latter department. But it is only a question of time when the entire New York team is leading the race in stolen bases and sacrifice hits if the official scorer keeps up his work in the scoring line. It would not be out of place for President Pulliam to look into the style of scoring that the New York scorer has been doing. It is not doing justice to the other players of the league when the New York players are given credit for stealing a base when they go there on a double steal; that is the way they score it in that city. The complete records follow:

NO HITS NOR RUNS MADE BY HERRON HILL MEN

Bechtel, Beltzhoover's New Pitcher, Proves Himself Star in First Game.

Beltzhoover went out to Herron Hill yesterday and created consternation among the local players and rooters by walking all over the pride of the hill district to the tune of 20 to 0. Bechtel, the new pitcher secured by Beltzhoover, was on the slab and he accomplished the feat of shutting out the home team without a hit or a run or giving a base on balls. His team backed him up in sensational style. The infield worked with clocklike precision, Kirk, Swartling and Bisel making clever stops and throws, while Herron made two sensational one-handed catches, which caught the rooters' fancy, who cheered for fully five minutes. Smythe and Knabe made several great running catches and shared the fielding honors. The entire team slugged the ball and drove Eyerman to the woods in five innings. Schilling, who succeeded Eyerman, fared little better, and in the ninth inning, with the bases full, Swartling drove the ball over the left fielder's head for a home run. Kirk, in the same inning, rapped out a double with three men on bases. Score:

Jeffries and Munroe Are Not Likely to Meet---Turf Top Notchers to Race for Honors

PIRATES HAVE VERY HARD LUCK

Accidents and Sickness Among the Players Has Kept Team in Poor Shape.

THE CASE OF PITCHER LYNCH

The work put up by those Pirates of ours has been of such an in and out character that the followers of the team are at a loss as to whether they should claim the pennant or be satisfied with a lower position in the chase for honors. Thank goodness the season is comparatively young yet and Clarke's crew still has time to make the running, but it will have to get a healthy move on.

It is doubtful if there ever was a team so fiercely handicapped as has been the Pirates since the start of the pennant race. At the start out the players were not in shape, having encountered anything but training weather at Hot Springs and no sooner did the players begin to show shape than the pitchers went wrong and that was a severe enough handicap. However, Manager Clarke managed to worry along, winning just enough games to give the club a look in, and when he got the pitchers going all right then the infield went to pieces from sickness and injury and it took time for these players to round to all right.

The Fans Were Awakened.

The showing made by the team on its first eastern trip was enough to awaken the slumbering enthusiasm in the breasts of the fans and there were claims for the fourth pennant and not without reason. The team no sooner strikes the home grounds than things go wrong again and changes must be made. First it was Phillippe, the team's most reliable pitcher, who was taken sick and had to lay off for a rest. This forced the manager to make a shift in his pitchers and this hole is no sooner filled up than Transfeld suffers an injury and is forced out of the game. All of this is very exasperating not only to the club officials, but to the followers of the game as well. However, there is a limit to everything and it is to be hoped that the Pirates have reached the end of their string of bad luck.

The clever showing made by Pitcher Lynch in his first game in St. Louis has raised the hopes of the fans and they are counting on having a man who will do his fair share toward helping the team to another pennant. Lynch was a trifle wild in his first game, but that was looked for as the college boy had been devoting the best part of his time to his studies and had little time to do any work on the rubber. This wildness was looked for by Manager Clarke and it is a certainty that as soon as Lynch settles down to regular work his wildness will wear away.

Must Not Expect too Much.

It will not do for the local public to look for too much from this young pitcher before he gets more work. He has been done against college teams and he will need a lot of experience in the league before he can get on to the batters and study out their weaknesses. As a rule it takes a pitcher a season or two to get seasoned in the big league and then have drifted in many instances of people who were stars in the minor leagues and yet who failed even with long practice and work against the big league batters. The pitchers who make good from the jump or are few and far between and in the case of Lynch the Pirate rooters would do well to bear in mind that he is still a youngster as far as experience is concerned.

The letting out of Pitcher Scanlon during the week came as a sort of a surprise to the followers of the game. This young twirler had all the ear-marks of coming star and his first work in the National league team last fall was of the kind to justify the very best claims made for him. This spring, however, Scanlon developed a streak of wildness that he could not overcome, and, though Manager Clarke gave him plenty of time to round out, he did not seem to be able to get the ball. There is not much doubt that with a team where he could get regular work the young man would get straightened out and he is likely to be heard from yet.

As to the Dougherty Deal.

During the week the baseball world has been stirred up by the action of Ban Johnson in taking player Dougherty from the Boston team and turning him over to the New York team, the alleged motive being to make a pennant winner out of the Highlanders in order to offset the Giants as a drawing card in Metropolis. This latter part of the story is denied, but not any too strongly, by the American leaguers, particularly by the writers who lean heavily toward that organization. It is noticeable, however, that the leaders of the Boston team have not rushed into print in order to furnish an excuse of the action of the league leader.

The question has been raised as to the move being a violation of the spirit of the peace treaty between the leagues, but whether that holds good or not it is a certainty that the transfer of the player is a bad thing for the game and will give those crookers who always seize the first opportunity in order to decry the honesty of the sport, and the move is, therefore, one that is bound to hurt. The matter is one which, in a measure, belongs to the American League, but, at the same time, all lovers of the game have an interest because of the injury that it is bound to bring.

The Move Was Foretold.

The Boston public has already been heard from on the subject, and to them it looks like a clear attempt to weaken their world's champions and strengthen an opposition team. Last winter it was openly declared that the power that be in the American League had decided to make the New York team the pennant winner in that organization this year, and this declaration caused such rabid partisans of the Americans as Frank Hough of Philadelphia and Tim Murnane of Boston to have spasms, and they wanted the life of the man who dared make such a charge. In view of the Dougherty transfer it looks as though the man who started that story knew what he was talking about.

THE LAST WEEK OF HARD WORK

Yale and Harvard Crews in Fine Shape and a Hard Race May Be Looked For.

BOTH CREWS CONFIDENT

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

GALES FERRY, CONN., June 25.—The last week of training for the big varsity boat race has been full of excitement. The Yale varsity has passed through this last week of training very smoothly, so far as the work of the crew is concerned, but Yale's confidence in her eight has been tested by the daily improvement of Harvard and the increasing respect for Colson as a coach. It is not idle flattery nor an attempt on the part of Yale to hide her own confidence that has caused the Blues' coaches to admit to their friends that Colson has produced what to Yale seems to be Harvard's best crew of recent years, and in the opinion of some of Yale's best coaches the best eight that the Crimson has sent to the Thames. The Harvard crew of 1900 gave Yale a terrific race and worried the Elis for two weeks prior to the race. The Yale crew of 1900 is not considered the equal of the present Yale crew, and yet Colson's eight is by Yale men considered almost on a par with Capt. Cross' crew.

It would be foolish to try to conceal the fact that Yale believes she has what seems to be an fast, if not the fastest eight that she has produced. The coaches today consider the crew far superior to the 1903 varsity crew. In practice spins the present crew has made the most consistent record for speed of any Yale crew of recent years. The crew is physically almost an ideal eight. The men are big and strong and yet they are suited for rowing. The eight averages 172⅝ pounds. The average height is 6 feet 1 inch. The average age is 21 years. There is not a single man in the shell who is less than six feet tall. The oldest is Capt. Cross, who is 25, and there is no man who is less than 20 years of age. The weights range from Weeks at bow, who weighs 158, to Whittier at No. 6, who weighs 186.

The Ideals of the Coach.

Big men are considered difficult to handle in an eight-oared shell, but the men in the Yale boat have the peculiar qualities which boating coaches always look for. They have the typical long backs, such as are always found in the famous English crews. The eight gets a reach on its stroke which is simply terrific from a rowing point of view. Yet with all this size and weight the crew rows with an ease that is surprising. The stroke is wonderfully well rounded out. There is not a hitch nor a break in the shell. The crew has acquired the ability to row well within itself, to raise or to lower the stroke, as may be necessary, and is, in a word, a magnificent rowing machine.

After all this has been said about the Ellis' crew, and every word of it is true, the fact remains that the Harvard eight has shown speed here on the river which practically places it on a par with Yale. On Thursday, for example, the two crews rowed over the same half mile within a few minutes of each other and there was only a difference of two seconds between them. Over this half mile Yale unquestionably rowed harder and made a greater effort than Harvard did. In fact, the Yale crew went above the limit of its stroke on this half mile, while Harvard was rowing easily. On Wednesday last the two eights rowed over the first two miles of the course within a very short time of each other. On this row Yale beat out Harvard by from four to six seconds. On the last four-mile trial there was again not ten seconds between the two crews. The difference was in Yale's favor, but Yale had a little better conditions than Harvard did on this time row.

There Is Little Difference.

It is comparisons like these and the smoothness of the Harvard eight that causes Yale to come to the conclusion that there is very little if any difference between the two crews. Colson's eight is just as striking to look at as Yale's. Harvard has far the height, power and just as fine types of men in her shell as Yale has. As a matter of fact a great many critics like the appearance of the Harvard men, physically, better than Yale.

In their rowing there is very little difference between the two crews. Colson, of course, is supposed to be teaching the Cornell stroke, or rather the Courtney stroke, while Yale is rowing the Yale stroke. As a matter of fact both crews are trying to row the English stroke and are rowing it to the best of their ability. As every well-informed boating man knows the Courtney stroke was discarded at Cornell after the Ithacans went to England and saw the superiority of the English stroke. It was then that Cornell's rowing authorities literally compelled Courtney to adopt and to teach the English stroke.

There are, of course, differences in the details of the strokes of the two eights. No two coaches striving to teach the same system will ever get exactly the same results. Harvard does her work a little different from Yale, but back of it all there are the same principles.

Both crews have great power, both have been ideally trained, both are in perfect physical condition and there is every reason to expect a close, hard race. The time rows have been a trifle in Yale's favor, but the difference has been far less than usual. If it were not for the fact that Yale is rowing right up to her best mark and that the coaches see practically no reasons for criticising the crew, the Elis would be badly worried. The only reason they are not worrying is simply this: Yale's experience has been that when she has a crew that is up to Yale's best mark she has been able to win against Harvard. The present crew is up to this mark and relying on history and experience, Yale expects to win the varsity race.

The Freshmen Crews.

The freshmen crews seem to be almost as evenly matched as the varsity eight. A week ago Harvard seemed to have the best of the freshmen race, but during the past week the Yale youngsters have made rapid strides in their development. Their time row against the varsity on Wednesday was an eye-opener to the coaches. If the time rows of the Harvard freshmen as given out at Red Top, are correct, there is so little difference between the freshmen boats that the race should be a toss-up. The Blues' eight does not have the power that last year's freshmen crew did in practice a year ago. Yale thinks she has an even chance in this race. Harvard seems to be confident of winning the freshmen race and it may be that the Harvard men are correct in their judgment. A year ago Yale was confident that she could not lose this race and yet Harvard gave her a desperate race.

FUTURE STARS OF THE DIAMOND

The Edgar Baseball Team Which Has Made Quite a Showing Among the Smaller Clubs.

'FRISCO SPORTS ARE IN DOUBT

There Is an Impression That the Jeffries-Munroe Fight Will Never Take Place.

GOSSIP OF THE PRIZE RING

SAN FRANCISCO, June 25.—If Jeffries and Munroe come on the boards again there will probably be more interest in their meeting than there would have been if they had boxed a scheduled. At the same time, if a vote were taken among the experts of San Francisco sportdom right at this moment it would be found, most likely, that the greater number believe there will never be a contest between the champion and the miner.

The outlook certainly isn't the brightest. Here we have one of the heavies on the broad of his back with a water logged knee, while Munroe is bound for Chicago to see what can be picked up around the vaudeville circuit.

Of course, sore knees may mend and miners may come back, but the degree of pessimism that exists in regard to Jeffries' injury is heartrending. The reports of the attending physicians that the big fellow will be as right as a trivet in a short space of time, does not carry much weight with the solons of the sporting belt.

It is really wonderful how many similar cases are recalled from day to day, and if Jeffries' knee doesn't stiffen permanently after yielding the quality of "synovial fluid" it is said to have yielded, the laymen who sit in solemn conclave and discuss his symptoms around the sporting resorts will pronounce the boilermaker as much of a freak as that man whose heart was found to be on the right side of his body.

And this is not all, either. There are others who do not quite believe that Jeff is doomed to wander through life with a frozen leg, but they require some assurance that the "housemaid's knee" will not assert itself again when Jeffries finds himself in the full swing of training. It will, therefore, be seen that the men who keep tab of pugilistic happenings are inclined to look on the gloomy side of things. It is sincerely to be hoped that Jeffries will round to and be able to keep his engagement with his newest rival.

Eddie Hanlon will arrive here within a few days and will go into camp at Croll's gardens, Alameda, where he has prepared himself for all his important engagements.

Nelson trained at Thechan's, near the beach, for his match with Canole, but has decided to go into quarters at Smiling Hevaner's place at Larkspur this time. In explaining he says that he has to make a much lighter weight.

"I boxed Canole at 134 pounds at 3 o'clock, which was practically catch-weight for me," said he. "Now I must make 130 pounds at six, which is quite a difference. It is necessary for me to get away from the cool ocean breeze, and as they tell me the weather is quite warm at Larkspur, I think I will have no difficulty in making weight there."

It is believed that a great improvement will be noticeable in Hanlon's ring methods when he returns here. Since he went east he has boxed some of the fastest youngsters battling along the Atlantic coast, and as the six-round goes which prevail in the east are of necessity full of action, it is thought that Eddie will have acquired the knack of setting a rapid pace.

CREATED WORLD'S RECORD AND WON ADVANCE STAKES

Irish Lad Put Up a Remarkable Race and the Finish Was Most Exciting of Year.

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 25.—Driven to the limit in the last few strides, the favorite, Irish Lad, won the $15,000 Advance stakes at Sheepshead Bay today, making a new world's record of 2:17 3-5 for the distance, 1⅝ miles, the best previous record, made by Sabine in Chicago, July 5, 1894, being 2:18⅘. Ort Wells was second and Bryn Mawr third. The crowd in attendance today was equal to that of Suburban day, and the throng witnessed the greatest racing seen in the east in years.

The field that made up the Advance stakes was one of the best that has ever faced the starter for this rich prize. Set evenly were the horses matched that the favorite, Irish Lad, was quoted at the good price of 5 to 2. The Drake-Gates combination bet heavily on Ort Wells, who closed at 3 to 1. Bryn Mawr, winner of the Brooklyn derby, was quoted at 7 to 1, while The Picket was held at 4 to 1. Delhi and Highball, the latter the American derby winner, went begging at 10 and 12 to 1, respectively.

The horses made a good start, and Irish Lad, who ran today without blinkers and equipped with a burr, was the first to show, with Delhi second and Ort Wells third. The Picket was off in a good position, but in the rush for the rail was shut off and interfered with, which probably accounted for his bad race. Passing the stand the first time, Irish Lad was leading by a head from Delhi, while Ort Wells ran third. The quarter was covered in 24 seconds.

Making the turn into the back scratch and coming to the half mile pole, Delhi took the lead, with Irish Lad second, a length back. The time to the half was 48 2-5 seconds. Ort Wells was third, with Bryn Mawr and Highball close up. Delhi was still leading at the three quarters, which was covered in 1:12, Irish Lad being in second place and going easily. Ort Wells was third, and he, too, was going in a good easy stride. The mile was covered in 1:38 flat, the fastest mile run in the east this year. The fast pace had told on Delhi, and as the leaders swung by the mile post he slowly dropped back beaten.

Hildebrand, on Irish Lad, at this point sent his mount to the lead, and as he flashed past the one and one-quarter pole in 2:04 the game son of Candlemas-Arrowgrass was a length ahead of Ort Wells, who had moved up as Delhi fell back.

It was at this point that the boys on the leaders began to ride hard. Irish Lad was ahead, but O'Neil, on Ort Wells, began to gain. He was, however, unable to hold Irish Lad, who passed under the wire a winner by a short head in 2:17 3-5. Ort Wells was five lengths in front of Bryn Mawr. It was one of the greatest races, one of the gamest finishes seen in many a day in the east. As Hildebrand rode Irish Lad back to the judges' stand a great volume of cheers proclaimed the popularity of his victory, while the band struck up "The Wearing of the Green," the colors of Irish Lad being green with white hoops on the sleeves.

J. E. Madden's Flyback won the $25,000 great trial stakes. Coupled with his stable companion, Councilman, they were favorites in the betting. Councilman made the running to the fence, where Flyback moved out and won driving by one and one half lengths. Hildebrand won both stake races today, beside taking the fifth race. He also rode two horses, finishing second. Summaries:

First race, 6 furlongs on main track: Lady Amelia, 122, Phillips, 15 to 10 and 1 to 2, won; Major Pelham, 108, Hildebrand, 10 to 1 and 4 to 1, second; Auditor, 109, Hedgesen, 10 to 1 and 4 to 1, third. Time, 1:12 4-5. Cobourg, King Pepper, Oarly II., Pentaur, Reliable, Ancestor, Escurial, W. B. Fasig and Brother Bill also ran.

Second race, the Beacon steeplechase, about 2½ miles: Judith Campbell, 135, Mann, 8 to 2 and 7 to 10, won; Caller, 150, Donohue, 7 to 10 and 1 to 4, second; Titian, 151, Henry, 4 to 1 and 5 to 2, third. Time, 5:08. Foxhunter fell.

Third race, the great trial, last six furlongs of Futurity course: Flyback, 122, Hildebrand, 9 to 2 and 2 to 10, won; Sparkling Star, 122, Martin, 2 to 1 and 4 to 5, second; The Claimant, 122, Shaw, 20 to 1 and 7 to 1, third. Time, 1:13 2-5. Councilman, Veto, Simplicity, Voloday, Right Royal and Agile also ran. Flyback and Councilman coupled.

Fourth race, the Advance, one mile and three furlongs: Irish Lad, 129, Hildebrand, 5 to 2, and even, won; Ort Wells, 111, O'Neill, 3 to 1 and even, second; Bryn Mawr, 111, Lyne, 7 to 2 and 7 to 5, third. Time, 2:17 3-5. Highball, Delhi and The Picket also ran.

Fifth race, last 5 furlongs Futurity course, selling: Virgo, 95, Hildebrand, 5 to 2 and even, won; Asterisk, 107, O'Neill, 3 to 1 and even, second; Highborn, 109, Crimmins, 2 to 1 and 4 to 5, third. OFFICIALS ARE NAMED FOR THE FOURTH MEET

Prof. Cooper and Joe Thompson to Have Charge—Will Be Held in the Morning.

Two competent and hustling officials have been selected for the Fourth of July sports at Friendship park. H. B. Cooper of Pittsburgh High school will act as referee and Joseph H. Thompson of Conway college will be clerk of the course. This is ample guarantee that every pounster will have a fair chance in any event on the program. The other officials will be men of ability and the sports will be run off without hitch or squabbling.

There is a splendid opportunity in the 100-yard dash for boys under 16, as only a few entries have so far been received for this particular event. All entries must be in by June 30, in order to have the names printed in the official program for that day. There will be four diamond prizes in each race and the gems will be exactly the same as those won by athletes at previous meets at Schenley park on Independence day.

Ten o'clock has been set as the time to start the athletic program, as the majority of athletes favor starting as early as possible. As there are no bicycle races this year, the meet should be run off in not over four hours, and probably in less time. If all those enter who have signified their intention of competing, the meet will be up to the standard of former years. Athletes who have not received entry blanks and who desire to enter can secure them at this office.

LOSES AT LACROSSE.

Queens Team Won 9 to 7—The Local Team Will Be Strengthened.

Yesterday afternoon at the Pittsburgh college grounds the Pittsburgh lacrosse team was defeated by Queens by the score of 9 to 7 before a large and enthusiastic audience. The game was closely contested and from the interest taken in the game by the spectators it would seem that lacrosse is going to be a very popular game in Pittsburgh. Shortly after 3 o'clock Referee Phymister blew his whistle and the teams lined up as follows:

Pittsburgh.		Queens.
Nimlie	Goal	Graham
Bruce	Point	Shepherd
Donnely	Cover Point	McKay
Smith	First Defense	DuVal
Schooley	Second Defense	Simpson
Smith	Third Defense	Dunn
Daniels	Center	Campbell
Melville	Third Home	Hamilton
Roberts	Second Home	Long
Lamb	First Home	Simpson
Taylor	Outside Home	Hill
McCarron	Inside Home	Woods

Goal judges—Thomas and Hartley. Referee—Phymister. Time—Four 15-minute quarters.

At the start of the game Queens started to rush matters and until the end of the first two quarters it seemed as though they would have things all their own way, but in the early part of the third the Pittsburgh team seemed to wake up and at one time had the score tied, but owing to their inability to keep up the terrific pace set by Queens in the last quarter allowed the latter team to add two more to their credit before the call of time, winning the game 9 to 7.

At the close of the game the management announced that they would take the necessary steps to strengthen the team, as it is the intention to have the Pittsburgh team second to none in this country.

SHUTOUT SCORED.

Rivals in Steel Mills Meet at Edgar Thomson Park in Good Game.

In one of the best played games at Edgar Thomson park this season, the team representing the transportation department of the Homestead Steel works defeated the railroad boys of the Edgar Thomson works yesterday morning. Hays, for Homestead, pitched a superb game, and was ably supported by his team mates. The feature of the game was a great throw from deep right field by McDonough, nailing a man at the plate and preventing the Braddock boys from scoring. Donnelly also pitched a good ball and by his support been perfect the score would not have been so big. Score:

ALL CREWS ARE TRAINING HARD

There Are Lively Days at Poughkeepsie and the Coaches Are Keeping Very Quiet.

EASTERN SPORT GOSSIP

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 25.—The arrival of the Wisconsin rowing squad completes the complement of the college crews which will take part in the great intercollegiate regatta to be held at Poughkeepsie. All in all, it is as fine a lot of young athletes as has ever been got together, and some fine sport is looked for. Nearly all the crews are above the average, and all are doing splendid work. Each crew seems confident of winning, and experts say that each has a chance.

At this writing Columbia and Wisconsin seem to be the best liked, though it is admitted that Pennsylvania is unusually strong, while Courtney, of Cornell, is always looked to for a surprise of some description when the day for the races comes. Andy O'Dea, the Wisconsin trainer, will make no predictions as to the outcome of the race, but he believes he has a championship crew and expects them to be with the leaders when the last spurt begins. Last year he had a very fast combination and much was expected of them.

Veterans of Varsity.

There are but four veterans in the varsity shell this year in Stevenson, stroke; Miller, No. 7; Captain Jordan, No. 6, and Bartlett, No. 2. The new men are Van Vorris, Davis, Schumacher and Burling. The latter quartet have all had experience as members of the freshmen crews and are a strong, husky lot of oarsmen.

Equally, if not greater, interest is taken in the Yale-Harvard race at New London. Yale will be the favorite in the betting, but Harvard's crew is gaining ground every day and the result of the race is no sure thing. There is some talk of arranging a match between the winners at Poughkeepsie and at New London for the eastern college championship, but nothing is likely to come of it.

An agreement has been entered into by Princeton and Harvard, by which all branches of college sports will be between the New Jersey and Massachusetts colleges. Harvard will quit playing Pennsylvania the year being the last year of any games of any sort between them. For three years efforts have been made looking forward to the agreement now reached. Pennsylvania is expected to display some dissatisfaction at the new arrangement, because she is being pushed aside by the Crimson for the Orange and Black.

In the past there has been some feeling between Harvard and Princeton, which reached such a pitch that gridiron battles were discontinued. The new move will, it is thought, culminate in a triple alliance between Yale, Princeton and Harvard.

Will Try a New Sport.

An attempt will be made early next fall to establish a class in jiujitsu, the Japanese art of wrestling, at Harvard. Professor Y. Yamashita, assisted by H. Koldzumi, recently gave a lecture on the system, during which he illustrated several of the 308 ways in which an opponent may be thrown. At the close of the lecture it was announced that if a class of 25 pupils could be formed Yamashita would return in the fall and take charge of the instruction. A number of the students have already enrolled their names, and it appears certain that the requisite number will be secured to form the class. The charge for the full course, which will cover the entire term, will be $100. It is reported that several of Crimson football players may take up the course after the gridiron season.

Eastern sports have about abandoned hope of a meeting between Jeffries and Munroe. The ruptured knee proposition finds little credence here and the suggestion that Jeff be "framed" by the big miner, finds even less. The fiasco is generally regarded as an indisposition on the part of the champion to go into the ring and run the risk of defeat, which always exists when the other fellow is a big, game, hitting proposition, such as Munroe undoubtedly is. Unless there is more money in sight than is now indicated will be drawn by them. Until the miner has demonstrated a good deal more clearly than he has to the minds of the sporting public that he is somewhere near a match for the big fellow, it is doubtful if there will be any fight. It is possible, of course, that the hard things said about the champion may induce him to go into the ring in August, regardless of the box office, but this is doubtful.

Fitz Is Working Hard.

Bob Fitzsimmons is training hard for his bout with Philadelphia Jack O'Brien in Philadelphia on July 6. It is dollars to doughnuts that both men will be fresh and strong at the end of the bout. It will mean a little easy money for the fighters, but will decide nothing.

A dispatch from Butte, Mont., states that George Gardner, the Lowell light heavyweight, and Jim Jeffords of California, have been matched to meet for 20 rounds at catchweights before the Montana A. C. of Butte, on July 4. Gardner has already defeated the Californian and should experience no trouble in repeating the trick.

Billy Madden, manager of Gus Ruhlin, has announced that the "Akron Giant" is ready to meet Jack Munroe in place of Jeffries on June 30. Ruhlin is anxious to meet Munroe, and believes that a battle between himself and the Butte miner would draw a good house. Madden has wired the proposition to San Francisco, but has not yet received a response.

"Buddy" Ryan, the Chicago lightweight, and Willie Fitzgerald, the tough Brooklyn lightweight, have been matched to meet for 10 rounds at 133 pounds, weigh in at 3 p. m., on July 4, before the Port Huron A. C. of Port Huron, Mich.

TURF CHAMPION WILL BE SETTLED

The Pick of the Turf Will Be in Brighton Handicap and It Will Be a Great Race.

GLANCE AT THE HORSES

[Special Telegram to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 25.—The question of the turf championship for 1904 has begun to interest turfmen, and while there is not the intense rivalry which existed last year between the admirers of Waterboy, McChesney and Hermis in the older division and Irish Lad and Africander among the 3-year-olds, the season is a long way from over yet and there has developed already material for some very pretty controversies over which horse may fairly be entitled to the turf crown.

Of the last season's favorites Hermis and Irish Lad unquestionably have shown away in the lead so far. They are both in prime condition and have run some beautiful races. The winning of Irish Lad in the Metropolitan and Hermis in the Suburban stamped them as the great race horses they are. It may be that Waterboy, McChesney and Africander may round into championship form—and again become contenders. Up to this time, however, they have not. The Picket has proven himself at home in the best company. His races in all three of the big handicaps so far run—the Metropolitan, Brooklyn and Suburban—have been up to th highest mark, and he must be reckoned in any race when he faces the starter.

The Race of Champions.

Highball's race in the American derby also makes him a contender for championship honors.

The Brighton handicap, on June 29, will bring all these champions together, and the greatest race of the greatest racing season in the history of the American turf should result.

The sensational victories gained by Highball and Ort Wells last Saturday, the one in the American derby and the other in the rich Tidal stakes, taken with the defeat of the supposedly invincible Delhi, has knocked away all calculations regarding the form of the season's 3-year-olds. From a time standpoint, the victories of both the great 3-year-olds on Saturday is sensational. The Ben Strome colt traveled the American derby distance, a mile and a half, in 2:33, equaling the mark set by The Picket last year, while Mr. Drake's son of King Eric hung up the best record that has ever been made by a 3-year-old in the Tidal stakes, going the mile and a quarter in 2:06. He had up 126 pounds and won galloping. Had he been forced, there is no doubt but that he could have clipped a little more from this time mark.

The record of the 3-year-olds up to date—that is, those that figure for championship honors, is as follows: Delhi beat Bryn Mawr in the Withers stakes, at a mile, both carrying 126 pounds, Delhi winning by half a length, all out. Delhi's next victory was in the classic Belmont, in which he took up 126 pounds and went the mile and a quarter over the hill at Morris park in 2:06 3-5. After this performance there were those who conceded to Mr. Keene's great colt the title of champion.

In the meantime Ort Wells had started in a couple of overnight handicaps at Morris park and had won. After his race in the Withers, Bryn Mawr began showing some improvement and the shrewd ones began figuring on him as Delhi's probable conqueror. Highball had also started a number of times, but his races had been rather indifferent.

Pair of Good Ones.

Bryn Mawr and Highball met for the first time during the season in the Broadway stakes at Gravesend, Bryn Mawr beating Mr. Schefiel's crack a head after a sensational finish, Highball's race against Bryn Mawr in the Broadway stakes was so impressive that it looked as though the two met a few days later in the Brooklyn derby, at a mile and a half, equally weighted at 118, Highball was made an overwhelming favorite. The race, however, resulted in the easiest kind of a victory for the Coughacres stable's great colt. In the running of the race Highball showed a decided disposition to sulk and run out, and those who saw the race were then ready to put the great son of Ben Stromme down as greatly overrated. Before Saturday the championship fight, on form, seemed to have narrowed down to the issue between Bryn Mawr, Delhi and Ort Wells, unless there is a big surprise of those who follow the form of the horses closely. Ort Wells beat the mighty Delhi in the Tidal stakes, making the Keene colt look like a selling plater.

Ort Wells' performance on Saturday was a surprise, even to his warmest admirers, and in the absence of Bryn Mawr he will undoubtedly be the favorite for the Lawrence realization, which will be run on the last day of the Sheepshead Bay meeting. The Coughacres stable's great colt is not eligible for this race, but Delhi is.

A meeting between Ort Wells and Bryn Mawr, say at a mile and a quarter, with both colts in their best form, would make a grand race.

Captain Brown's Horse.

These calculations have not taken in Capt. S. S. Brown's great colt Broomstick, which is likely to be a contender for championship honors later in the season.

And then there is that three-year-old filly, Beldame, that really should not have suffered a defeat this season. She is a wonderful young mare, and if ever one of her sex had license to throw the gauntlet down to the sterner sex she is the one. We may not see her pitted against the colts until autumn, for there is an impression now that Hamburg Belle is being fitted with a view to meeting her in a filly stake, and more than an impression that the owner of Hamburg's daughter still thinks her the superior of Beldame.

Saratoga will probably develop the Futurity winner, as it has in other years. The two-year-old division has not panned out as well as was thought early in the year.

BRUSHTON OPENS PARK WITH BATTING STREAK

Shut Out Acorns and Pile Up 17 Runs to Their Own Account.

Brushton Athletic club opened their new grounds yesterday before a large crowd. The game looked to be a nice one until the fourth inning, when B. A. C. started a rally and hit the ball for 14 hits throughout the game. Wills, as usual, pitched a fine game, striking out 10 men and allowed but three hits, having the Acorns at his mercy in all stages of the game. The batting of H. Jefferies and C. Lyons were also features, the latter having a three-base hit and a two-base hit, and caught the game like a professional.

Colonial Girl Wins St. Louis Handicap---Golf and Amateur Sporting Events Yesterday

COLONIAL GIRL WON HANDICAP

Great Crowd Was Out to See the World's Fair Event and Race Proved Exciting One.

HERMIS MADE THE PACE

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

ST. LOUIS, June 25.—Colonial Girl, by Meddler-Springside, five years old, owned by Otto Stifel of St. Louis, running in the name of C. E. Rowe & Company, won the World's fair handicap at the fair grounds today. The eastern champion, Hermis, was second, three lengths back, Moharib, owned by John W. Schorr, was six lengths behind him. Colonial Girl won the race very easily.

The race was at a mile and a quarter, and was worth $41,600 to the winner. The track was in fair condition and about six seconds slow. After a delay of seven minutes at the post, caused by the restlessness of Bugler, Moharib and Flying Torpedo, Starter A. B. Dade caught the field in alignment and gave the word to go. Redfern on Hermis was the quickest to get his mount into motion, followed closely by Gold Heels, Moharib and Colonial Girl. Redfern immediately shot his mount to the outside of the track, where the going was better, followed closely by Gold Heels and Moharib. Passing the stand the first time, Hermis was leading by four lengths, running very easily, with Colonial Girl a length ahead of Moharib and Gold Heels, whose underpinnings began to bother him, fourth. The others were running well bunched behind the three leaders.

Taking up the long run down the back stretch, Hermis showed the way, leading by six lengths, with Colonial Girl, running easy, and a length ahead of Moharib, Gold Heels and Bernays, clearly outrun, ninth. Hermis carried the field to the half in 50 1-5, a terrific pace for a slow track. Colonial Girl still hung on, running well within herself. Moharib was third and Sambo fourth. At the three-quarter pole Redfern seemed to have the race at his mercy, but little A. W. Rooker, noticing that the eastern horse faltered and was tiring rapidly, sent Colonial Girl after him. Redfern felt his mount dre under him, struck him twice with the whip and the St. Louis horse ran up alongside of him.

Hermis shot out into the lead again, but it was a dying effort. Colonial Girl was surely and speedily overhauling him. As they rounded into the stretch a cry went up from the 50,000 spectators that Colonial Girl was beaten. Colonial Girl, beautifully ridden by A. W. Booker, had overhauled him before the turn for home was made and was going away. Fisher on Moharib then made his move. His mount responded gamely, but was no match for Colonial Girl, who won by a good length, Hermis third.

The horses passed the wire with Colonial Girl under wraps three lengths to the good, Hermis tiring at every jump, second six lengths ahead of Moharib, with the rest of the field beaten off.

After the race was presented Jockey A. W. Booker with $10,000. Delegations from Chicago, Kansas City, Louisville, Cincinnati, Memphis and other cities witnessed the race. Summary:

COLONEL WILKES SHOWS HIS SPEED

WAS SOME FAST RACING

The fourth meeting of the Pittsburgh and Allegheny Matinee club produced some of the best races seen on the island track for some time. The best event of the day was the mile trot against his record of 2:14 by Colonel Wilkes, W. V. Callery's bay gelding. Wilkes not only beat his own record by going the mile in 2:10¼, but lowered the trotting record for geldings and came within a fourth of equaling the record of 2:10 for the track, established by Dolly Dillon, the half sister of Lou Dillon, the trotting queen. The other races were above the average in speed at many of the heats and were hotly contested.

There were seven events scheduled and although the rain threatened to interfere with the racing, the sprinkling the track received did more good than harm, and fast time was made. The track was in excellent condition and of the seven events five were made in better than 2:20, three heats were run in better than 2:15. The only pacing event on the program proved to be a good race. Virginia Mac, S. A. Pickering's bay mare, again took a mile trotting event and Pickering's pacer, Flare Up, took second in the pacing event. J. D. Callery took the second race with his bay gelding, Mendal, and O. H. Werner, drove in Kitty L., his bay mare, a winner in the last event of the day.

Several horses made their first appearance on the track this season. Ramona, a bay mare, which was driven last year by H. Buhl, was raced yesterday and showed up well. Walter E., O. H. Werner's gelding and Harry, J. C. McCune's chestnut gelding, were made their appearance in the second event. Pug, a gray gelding owned by E. P. Whitcomb, ran his first race on the track this year, and made a great showing. O. H. Werner's gray mare, Kitty L., which won the last event in trial heats, by dying so won her first race on the track this year. The summaries:

CHICAGO WON MEET.

Princeton Was Second—There Was Intense Rivalry and Exciting Events.

ST. LOUIS, June 25.—Although the Olympic National Collegiate Athletic championship held today under the auspices of the world's fair olympic games early developed into a struggle for supremacy between Chicago and Princeton universities, the competition between the athletes representing those colleges was so keen and spirited that the largest crowd that has yet attended an athletic event on the world's fair grounds was amply repaid for braving the hot sun.

Chicago won the championship and the Walter B. Stevens silver trophy with a total of 70 points, defeating Princeton by 10 points. The scores of the other contestants were as follows: Michigan Agriculture college, 6; University of Illinois, 6; Colgate college, 5; Leland Stanford university, 4. Contestants from the following colleges were entered, but did not finish among the first four: South Dakota, Amherst, Christian, Brothers college of St. Louis and Missouri university.

While no records were broken the competition in every event was unusually keen and the result of the meet was in doubt until the last two events had been decided. The pole vault was especially interesting, as Dole, the present world's champion, was pitted against Harry Moore of Princeton in the final jumps. They could not negotiate the bar at 12 feet after the legal number of trials and it was decided to split the points awarded to first and second positions, giving third place to Clark of Chicago. Princeton had counted upon winning this event, and the result had a decided effect upon the outcome of the meet.

YOUNG CORBETT WANTS TO GET BACK INTO GAME

Won't Wait for Britt, but Will Try to Pick Up Some Easy Money.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 25.—Young Corbett has called off his match with Jimmie Britt, and is out with a challenge to meet all comers. Corbett and Britt signed articles of agreement, calling for a fight to take place in San Francisco some time in December. One of the stipulations was that neither of the principals was to engage in any contest in the meantime.

This is the clause that Corbett has decided to break, and unless he fights Britt during the summer he will be seen in the ring with some other good men. As no forfeits were put up when the articles were signed, Corbett will lose nothing calling off the match.

Since Corbett returned from England he has been taking things easy along Broadway. He is now anxious to get back into harness and earn a few dollars. Of course, he would prefer his next match with Britt, but he cannot wait until December.

Corbett feels he can jump in and get some easy money with his rival featherweights in the six or eight bouts and he will begin training at once. He has taken on considerable weight in the last couple of months, but a little active work on the road, he believes, will find him back in his old form.

"I am tired of doing nothing," said Corbett, "and I am going back into the game just as soon as I can find a good man to fight. Those articles signed by Britt for December don't go unless the fight is decided in the near future. The date is too far off, and then he doesn't want me to fight in the meantime. I guess I can take care of myself and Mr. Britt, too, when it comes to fighting. I will be ready for Britt when he shows that he means business. There is no use tying a man up. I don't like this game of taking things easy. I feel better when I am getting ready for a fight. If Britt can arrange to fight before I tackle any one else, why he is welcome to the match. There is no idea on my part to duck Britt. I know I can defeat him any time we come together, but if he insists upon putting the date off to December he will have a couple of goods fights in the meantime."

The Three Rivers

CINCINNATI, June 25.—The stage of the river at 6 p. m. today marked 10.8 feet and rising. Packets were in and out on good time, including the departure of the Queen City for Pittsburgh. There were no towboat movements. Word was received that the dams in the Kanawha would be let down from lock No. 11 to lock No. 7. This will allow of about 1,500,000 bushels of coal being shipped out of the district. The Winefrede left Point Pleasant yesterday morning and will arrive Monday. All of the coal which will be brought out of the Kanawha will be left in Cincinnati.

LOUISVILLE—River stationary; in canal, 4.7 feet; on falls, 2.5 feet; below locks, 9 feet.

WASHINGTON—River 10 feet 3 inches and rising.

STEUBENVILLE—River 5 feet 8 inches and stationary.

GREENSBORO—River 7 feet 6 inches and falling.

PARKERSBURG—River 7 feet and falling; Big Kanawha left at 5 a. m. for Pittsburgh; Kanawha at 1 p. m. for Pittsburgh.

WILL WIDEN CHANNEL.

Big Improvement to Be Made at Merriman, and Trouble There Will Cease.

It has been decided to widen the new Merriman channel, which was built recently with a width of 200 feet. Boats have been experiencing difficulty in getting through, principally on account of the low water, though riverman claim dredging is needed to put the channel in better shape. Capt. William Martin, who is in charge of the work of improvement in the district of Maj. W. L. Sibert, says after careful inspection, the bottom of the channel has none of the obstructions which riverman have reported. He says what is needed is a wider channel, so boats can get through without going aground on the shoal places. This improvement is to be started soon and will be completed in about two months. It has been decided to make the channel at least 100 feet wider.

Arrivals.

Columbia, DeMain, Morrantown.
Virginia, Pennywitt, Cincinnati.

Departures.

Virginia, Pennywitt, Cincinnati.
Columbia, DeMain, Morrantown.
Lorena, Wallace, Zanesville.

Local River Notes.

The I. C. Woodward will leave today at 6:30 a. m., bound for Morrantown.

The Enterprise got in yesterday with empties and the J. B. Williams is tied up at Steubenville.

The Exporter has passed Cincinnati with a tow of empties for Pittsburgh from Louisville. The Stragler is still tied up down river and will not get out until there is much higher water.

The action of government officials in lowering the movable dams in the Kanawha to permit the shipping of Kanawha river coal by forcing a rise in the Ohio, will probably benefit some of the big boats, and it was stated yesterday that towboat arrivals will be pretty numerous this week. As many boats as possible will be brought to port here soon in anticipation of higher water.

HARVARD ROWS FAST.

Varsity Crew Went Over Course in Fine Time and Coaches Are Happy.

GALES FERRY, CONN., June 25.—Hard practice for the annual Yale-Harvard boat races, which will take place on the Thames next Thursday, was stopped today. From now on the varsity, freshmen and four-oared crews will devote themselves to perfecting physical form for the grueling test which annually decides the rowing supremacy in these two great eastern universities.

All the crews of both Yale and Harvard were out today. Harvard varsity went over the four-mile course in 22 minutes and 5 seconds. Harvard's coaches are much pleased with their eight. The crew went over the course in two-mile course in under 11 minutes. After the trials satisfaction with the condition of the men and with their stroke and boat work was generally expressed.

The Yale varsity was given a paddle today with no time taken. The freshmen worked harder, taking two miles at top speed, while the four-oared crew went over with a sharp row. In the four-cared Meter had been put in at stroke and finished number 2, but the final makeup of the crew will not be known until Monday. Coach Kennedy announced today that he considered his men in fine physical condition.

WOMEN ADMIRE MRS. FAIRBANKS

Wife of the Vice Presidential Nominee Is Very Popular Throughout Country.

WELL-KNOWN IN PITTSBURGH

Nomination of Senator Fairbanks as Roosevelt's Mate Promises to Give Washington Society a Member of Rank Not Seen Since Hobart's Death.

The Republican national convention just over in Chicago has expressed its wish as to the personality of the first ladies of the land during the administration by nominating their husbands for the presidency and vice presidency of the United States. The same act by which President Roosevelt was nominated to succeed himself next March offers the possibility of a second term to Mrs. Roosevelt as mistress of the White House.

Not since the death of Garrett A. Hobart, vice president during William McKinley's first term in the presidential chair, and the withdrawal of Mrs. Hobart from Washington social life to her quiet home in New Jersey have the American people known a vice president and his wife, for the few months when Theodore Roosevelt acted in that capacity, a period shortened by the assassination of President McKinley, were during the summer adjournment of congress, and Mrs. Roosevelt and the Roosevelt children were not yet in Washington.

The association of the names of Mrs. Roosevelt, the president's wife, and Mrs. Fairbanks, the wife of the candidate for the vice presidency, brings into the social life of Washington no new figures, though among the younger women who compose their families will be some who will add to the interest in the women of the next administration. The gracious, cordial hospitality of Mrs. Roosevelt earned her the reputation within a few months after assuming the duties of mistress of the White House of being the most lavish hostess who had ever occupied the executive mansion. The debut of her stepdaughter, Miss Alice Roosevelt, and the continued round of social figure from the day of her 18th birthday anniversary, February 11, 1902, followed a few days later by the handsome ball in the White House and that same month by the visit of Prince Henry of Prussia to this country, when Miss Roosevelt christened Emperor William's yacht, are all fresh in the minds of the people. In the event of President Roosevelt's reelection it is possible that Miss Ethel Roosevelt, the young school girl daughter of the president and Mrs. Roosevelt, may have flowed up society from within the White House portals.

Interest in the Fairbanks.

While Mrs. Roosevelt and Miss Alice Roosevelt occupy the most conspicuous places in the eyes of the people, no little interest is attached to the probable appearance of Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks in Washington next year as the wife of the vice president of the United States, a position second only to that of Mrs. Roosevelt. With Mrs. Fairbanks will appear her daughter, Mrs. John W. Timmons, the wife of a young lieutenant in the navy, and her new daughter-in-law, Mrs. Warren C. Fairbanks of Chicago, a former Pittsburgh girl, who has already a wide circle of friends in the capital city.

In all the history of the United States there has never been a candidate nominated for the office of president or vice president whose wife bears such a national reputation as does the wife of Senator Fairbanks. She is known as one of the most charming hostesses in Washington, her home in Indianapolis is one of the most hospitable in that city of the middle west, while her friends are numbered by the thousands, so widely has her influence and power been extended. Mrs. Fairbanks has acquired a reputation as a campaign speaker, though it is hardly likely that her services will be required to win converts to her husband's cause.

Mrs. Fairbanks' most conspicuous work has been done within the last three years, when as president general of the Daughters of the American Revolution she has traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Maine to Louisiana, rallying the patriotic daughters throughout the nation to the support of the Memorial Continental hall which is to be through future generations their monument to the valor and deeds of the men who fought and women who aided them in their struggle for American independence. Her sweet graciousness, inexhaustible tact and strong personality have brought her success to such a degree in this, her most cherished scheme, that on April 19, 1904, the anniversary of Lexington, the corner stone of the Memorial Continental hall was laid in Washington, D. C., with most impressive ceremonies.

Mrs. Fairbanks Very Popular.

The Daughters of the American Revolution come of fighting forefathers and they have inherited their aggressive qualities and traits of character in a large measure but all partisan spirit has been laid aside in their loyal support of Mrs. Fairbanks since she became their executive officer.

The women of the White House have been notably domestic in their disposition and character only a few, and among them Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, holding a prominent place among the American women outside of their home. The vice president's wives have also brought domestic and social qualities to the support of their husbands in their high office in the nation's capital, Mrs. Adlai Stovenson being possibly the most prominent of this group of women by reason of her strong executive ability.

Few of these women, however, were known far from their home cities before they were made by virtue of the elective power of the American people the first ladies in the land. Mrs. Fairbanks, however, could scarce be better known than she is now throughout the United States.

Though her chief work during the last few years has been in the direction of patriotic effort, Mrs. Fairbanks has been almost equally interested in educational and philanthropic lines. She is a college trained woman and by her long experience in public work has become a skilled parliamentarian. She was for many years the president of the first literary club in Indianapolis and was also president of the Indiana Soldiers' Aid society during the Spanish war. In 1901 she was president of the American league of the Junior Republic in Washington, D. C. Mrs. Fairbanks was the first woman appointed on the Indiana state board of charities and has also served as a director of the general federation of women's clubs.

Popular Executive.

In 1901 during the sessions of the Tenth continental congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C., Mrs. Fairbanks was elected president-general of that organization. The nomination was made by Mrs. Fowler of Indiana and it was seconded by Ohio, South Carolina and other delegations. In 1902 when her term of office expired an amendment was adopted by the congress primarily for the purpose of removing the only obstacle to her re-election to the office. The president-general can serve two terms, but before her election to that office Mrs. Fairbanks had served a term as a member of the board, being vice president-general, and there was much doubt as to her eligibility to the second term in the office of president-general. So the amendment was adopted and as no other name was presented as a candidate for the highest office in the society the secretary was instructed to cast the ballot for Mrs. Fairbanks.

During her first term Mrs. Fairbanks was chairman of the Memorial Continental hall committee and in recognition of her services in its behalf, a silver loving cup was presented to her by the members of the committee when the purchase of the site for the hall was formally announced in 1902.

Though born in Ohio, Mrs. Fairbanks may almost be regarded as a woman of Pennsylvania. She has traced her lineage, for admission to the society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, back to Benjamin Cole of Pennsylvania, and also as recorded in the lineage book of the Daughters of the American Revolution, to Lieut. James Blakely and James Blakely, Jr., of New York. Mrs. Fairbanks is the daughter of Philander B. Cole and Dorothy Witter, his wife; the granddaughter of James Cole and Jerusha Blakely; the great granddaughter of James Blakely, Jr., and Anna Travers, and the great great granddaughter of James Blakely.

Benjamin Cole was a soldier who in 1781 received depreciation pay for his services in the Pennsylvania line. James Blakely in 1775 was an officer in the militia in New York. His son, James Blakely, Jr., was born on the Little Nine Partner grant. He enlisted in 1779 in the colonial service at the age of 16, and was a private in various commands until the close of the war. He survived to receive a pension for the service he had rendered. Mrs. Fairbanks' number of admission to the society of the Daughters of the American Revolution is 9558, placing her among the first 10,000 enrolled in the society whose ranks now number 40,000 women.

Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks have one daughter, Adelaide, who last November was married to Lieut. John W. Timmons, U. S. N. Mrs. Timmons was previously married when very young but early last year secured a divorce, resuming her maiden name, and a few months later married Lieut. Timmons. Warren C. Fairbanks, the son of Senator and Mrs. Fairbanks, was married to Miss Ethel Helene Cassidy of Pittsburgh on January 14 of this year. Senator and Mrs. Fairbanks and Mrs. Timmons coming on from Washington to be present at the ceremony, which was performed in St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal church and was one of the handsomest weddings of the year. The marriage in the church was followed by a large reception at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. William Metcalf, Jr. Mrs. Warren C. Fairbanks is a daughter of the late Edward T. Cassidy and of Mrs. Cassidy and is a niece of the late Henry W. Oliver and Mrs. Oliver. Mr. and Mrs. Warren C. Fairbanks are living in Chicago, where Mr. Fairbanks is practicing law. President and Mrs. Roosevelt sent them large baskets of flowers from the White House conservatories on the day of their wedding. With Mrs. Charles W. Fairbanks they were interested in the proceedings of the convention just closed. It was not the first that Mrs. Fairbanks had attended for she was with her husband at the convention that nomnnated James G. Blaine and also that which nominated Benjamin Harrison.

DETECTIVE FOOLED BY AN INNOCENT WOMAN

Sleuths Thought She Was Using One of the Wiles of a Female Pickpocket.

Several of the city detectives last week became engaged in the investigation of a case as a result of their observations, which gave them much uneasiness before they unraveled it. A well-dressed woman, about 30 years of age, passed the public safety building. She carried an umbrella. Three detectives were standing at the entrance of the building when the woman walked past. At Sixth avenue and Cherry alley the rain began. The woman raised her umbrella.

To her annoyance and to the surprise of the detectives three pocketbooks dropped on the pavement. Now, it is an old trick of female pickpockets to carry their plunder in an umbrella. The woman gathered up the pocketbooks and hurried down the avenue.

"That was strange," said one of the officers.

"We had better follow her up," remarked another.

With this the officers hurried down the street after the woman. She headed out Smithfield street in the direction of the department stores. The officers crossed her path; walked loops around her; scrutinized her face and shook their heads at each other, which all indicated the woman was a stranger to them.

"But we must learn who she is and where she goes," said one of the officers.

The woman passed across the street into a department store. The officers followed her. The woman walked through the store and finally drew up to a counter where pocketbooks are sold.

She laid three pocketbooks out on the counter. Two were children's clasp purses and the third was a leather initial pocketbook, which was apparently her property.

"I have two little girls at home," she said to the saleswoman, "and they have broken these purses and I want to match them."

The three detectives walked out of the store, wet and disgusted.

SCARE IN PARIS.

Other People Are Poisoned by Eating Duck a la Rouennaise.

PARIS, June 25—(Copyright, Cable.)—There is a veritable scare in Paris owing to cases of poisoning through eating duck a la rouennaise.

The death of the Comte de Laubespin first brought the matter before the public. Since then many cases have been reported. It appears to be proved that ducks killed by suffocation, which is necessary in the preparation of this dish, quickly becomes injurious to health and even poisonous in hot weather. The latest victim is the Vicomte de Surmers and six friends who were ill after eating canned a la rouennaise at a restaurant in the Bois de Boulogne.

SHORT DEED TO BE RECOMMENDED

Attorneys at Cape May Will Pass on Important Changes in Laws.

GOES TO NEXT LEGISLATURE

Urged That Orphans Court Be Given Entire Jurisdiction of Lunatics, Habitual Drunkards and Weak-Minded Persons—To Regulate Sheriff's Deeds.

At the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Bar association to be convened next Tuesday at Cape May, a number of important matters to the general public of the state will be presented, among the most important, a recommendation from the committee on law reform of a short form for a deed, which does away with all the cumbersome records of the Pennsylvania counties, and especially in Philadelphia and Allegheny counties, where so much property changes hands every day.

This form for a deed was presented at the last meeting, but was held over for some minor changes. It is expected to pass the state association this year and will then be presented to the next legislature for adoption as a law.

This form eliminates all the old forms of recital and phraseology, making the deed so that it contains only a few words besides the description of the property. A short form of mortgage will also be presented and adopted, having the approval of almost every attorney of prominence in the state.

Will Save Expenses.

The object of this committee is to make every law as simple as possible, and bring about uniformity in the acts of assembly and simplicity of procedure. All the long recitals of rights, privileges and other surplus verbiage in the deeds and mortgages are to be omitted entirely and the fact expressed as simply as possible.

"Go look at the recorder's office," said Attorney J. McF. Carpenter, who is a member of the committee on law reform, "and you will see an immense room full of books, not one of which weighs less than 15 pounds. They are growing every day until we will hardly have enough room in the court house to hold them. When a lawyer handles a few of these books every day, he finds he has done a great amount of work. The new form will cut the records down 75 per cent, so you can see what a great saving it will be in time, expense and money to every property owner and to the taxpayers generally, while lawyers will not have to read words, useless words, to arrive at what they are trying to do."

The new law will provide that every deed will be a deed in fee unless otherwise recited therein. As it now stands unless the word "heirs" is used it only conveys a life estate.

For Women and Children.

Another bill before the state bar association is one vesting exclusive jurisdiction in orphans' court in case of lunacy, habitual drunkenness and persons alleged to be weak minded. The purpose of this act, which was also prepared by Attorney J. McF. Carpenter, is to do away with the old commission in lunacy, avoid useless expense and protect the interests of women and minor children. The general mixup in the powers and duties of the orphans' and common pleas courts in some cases is well known. As the law now stands a committee may be appointed by common pleas court, and in order to sell real estate that may have come to the ward by descent or last will, he must apply to the orphans' court, give bond and then discover he is uncertain as to which court shall finally administer the funds.

Mr. Carpenter argues that all legal proceedings affecting estates of women and minor children ought to be in the jurisdiction of orphans' court, because its peculiar business is to administer trusts. One case shows how a mixup may occur. An Ohio lunatic had a committee in his own state. He owned coal in Pittsburgh left him by his father's will. In order to administer it a committee had to be appointed here by the common pleas court and give nominal bond. But as orphans' court has exclusive jurisdiction in sales of estates left by will, the committee had to go into orphans' court, give a heavy bond and secure permission to make the sale. He made the sale, and as committee was directed by court of common pleas to send the money to the committee in Ohio, which he did. But he was also under big bond in orphans' court to account for the money which was in Ohio. Thus the matter rests.

Another act which will be recommended to the association is an act to regulate the acknowledgement, registration and recording of sheriff's deeds. This practice is not uniform and it is expected the next legislature will act as the recommendations are handed in by the association. The members of the committee on law reform are Alexander Simpson, Jr., of Philadelphia, chairman; Judge Martin Bell of Blair; J. McF. Carpenter of Pittsburgh; Judge J. B. McPherson of Philadelphia; E. W. Biddle of Cumberland; Rodney A. Mercur of Bradford; Henry C. Niles of York; C. LaRue Munson of Lycoming; A. V. Barker of Cambria; W. U. Hensel of Lancaster, and George R. Bedford of Luzerne.

TWO TEACHERS APPOINTED FOR FIFTH AVENUE SCHOOL

T. C. Whipple has been appointed to succeed Miss Mary Evans as teacher in arithmetic and algebra in the commercial department of the Fifth Avenue High school. Miss Laura McCandless is to be succeeded as teacher of commercial law there by W. C. Morgan. Both appointments were made yesterday, following the resignations of Miss Evans and Miss McCandless.

HOW POLITICS SEEM IN THE ZOO

Animals Tell of Their Various Leanings in the Presidential Campaign.

G. O. P. ELEPHANT IS SANGUINE

What Hill Has Been Doing to the Democratic Mule Will Not Do It Much Good in the Coming Race—The Eastern War May Be Ended.

"This has been my busiest week for several years and I have plenty of work ahead, so if you want to talk to me you'll have to be quick," declared the G. O. P. elephant in the Highland zoo yesterday when I paused to interview him. "Well, they certainly put up a good strong platform that even a boy of my size need not fear displaying himself on," continued his Republicanship, rising to his full height. "There's nothing to it. I made the race in 1896 and 1900 and won in a walk with the strongest kind of a wind against me—Bryan. Now I've got Jockey Parker scared speechless already, and if he rides it will be all Hill work for that Democratic mule."

"Do you think capital will be made out of the reception Roosevelt afforded Booker T. Washington of Tuskegee?" I asked, timidly.

Make no Capital.

"Tusk-e-gee? Tusk-e-gee?" exclaimed his elephantship in a rage. "Why, my boy, don't you worry about Tusk-e-gee; keep your eye on the Tusk-a-G. O. P. Every man has the right of choice, and Roosevelt had as much right to have Booker T. Washington for dinner as Oolong. As far as capital being made out of it, they won't make the Capitol out of anything. They'll never see Washington. Keep your weather eye on this," commanded G. O. P., pointing his proboscis at me; "that is the only direct trunk line to Washington without a return coupon. It'll do no good to hold that convention in St. Louis. Someone told them to go to the World's Fair city if they wanted a great show, but the whole ticket will be the ex-position."

"I'm glad you're going to stand pat," I volunteered, with a tone of congratulation.

"Of course, I stood pat! I never had cause to do anything else! There never were anything in the discards but a bunch of Democratic four-flushes. They have heard the chairman Root and Cannon's report and they're all in already. It won't even be a race. The Democracy mule hasn't a sound leg to stand on, much less run. Trainer Hill has been using No-trust bandages and Imperialistic liniment on him. He's been fired, cross-fired and blistered by Dr. Bryan, and Cleveland has been trying the absent treatment, but, say, I'll put you next to the trouble. He's off on his feed. He's too weak to stagger. They've been feeding him on Free Trade, Free Silver, and Free Speech, but what he needs is Free Lunch and a little more Gold Cure."

"Do you think Hearst may be chosen to guide him?" I asked.

Is a Cronic Kicker.

"Well, of course, Hearst, as the jockey, would be entitled to apprentice allowances, but while he has not been a direct free silver advocate, this year he has been giving a thorough demonstration to the delegates of what free silver really is. The only thing in favor of the old mule as a consistent Democrat is that he is a chronic kicker. You'll have to excuse me now," concluded his elephantship; "Cortelyou is calling me. I'll see you later."

Roars from the rear attracted my attention and I spied Tammany, the Bengal tiger. He was pacing up and down in his cage, and as I approached he paused, and, brushing a tear from his eye with a magnificent sweep of his tail, began:

"I know you've come to interview me, but I do not care to discuss politics at present. Youll have to excuse my apparent lack of patriotism in displaying only my stripes. My stars are all in New York at present. It's a habit they have of compelling all loyal Tammanyites to wear such colors when in confinement. It's the same old Republican game, such as was played upon my friend, Bill Sweed and John Y. McKane. We were always "burned" at election time. And still they kick when we try to make up for lost votes when we get out.

May Terminate the War.

"Things are different now than they were when I owned New York. Now half the population is being chased out by the district attorney, while I was always there to greet everyone with my lid off. Still, they cant keep me down in my own burg. They tried a Strong mayor and a Low mayor, but neither would suit. But on this presidential deal they can't count on me for Parker. It's the same old story of the 'Lady or the Tiger?' and, say," concluded the tiger as he turned to go, "I'm not ladylike."

The hour was late and I hastened to leave, when I chanced to see the Siberian bear cavorting on his haunches in a corner of his den.

"What brings the Russian representative here at such a time when your attention should be at home?" I queried with surprise.

"Sh-h-h! Sh-h-h!" he cautioned. "Not a word for publication. I am here on a very important mission for my government—one, I believe, when fulfilled, will terminate the war at once into a complete victory for us."

Glancing about for fear that someone might be within hearing distance, he beckoned me to the cage, and, holding his paw to his mouth, whispered: "I'm here to see President John Mitchell of the United Mine Workers of America. He carries the key to our success."

"Explain, explain!" I urged, somewhat impatiently.

"Well, it's this way," continued the Russian emissary in subdued tones. "You know we have a large floating population of mines in Russia, especially near Port Arthur. I have learned of the accomplishments of the United Mine Workers in gaining their ends when in trouble—by going off and striking. Our mines strike, but don't go off. That is the secret I wish to solve."

PROMISE HIGH SPEED.

General Electric Company Willing to Guarantee Rate of 125 Miles an Hour.

BERLIN, June 25.—(Special Cable.)—Two leading electrical firms in Germany—Messrs. Siemens & Halske and the General Electric Company—have elaborated schemes for the construction of a high-speed electric railway from Berlin to Hamburg, a distance of 180 miles.

Messrs. Siemens & Halske offer to construct the railway at a cost of £3,500,000 for a single line, and £5,200,000 for a double line, guaranteeing a speed of 100 miles an hour.

It is estimated that with one pound first class fares and 15 shillings second, 520,000 passengers annually would make the single line and 850,000 the double line profitable.

The General Electric Company is willing to guarantee a speed of 125 miles an hour for the same fares, but estimates that the cost of construction would be higher.

Probably one of these schemes will be adopted, as the emperor is ambitious that Germany should be the pioneer in high-speed electric railways.

SOCIETY CIRCUS AMUSES PARIS

Performers, Even Including Clowns, All Members of Upper Ten of French Capital.

ALSO CHILDREN'S FETE GIVEN

Not Enough Youngsters Present, However to Claim All Beautiful Gifts Prepared for Them—M. Maurice Raoul-Duval Forsakes Polo for Politics.

(Copyright, 1904, by New York Herald Co.)

PARIS, June 25.—M. Moller's circus, an entertainment in which all the performers, musicians and even clowns, were aristocratic amateurs, was given this week. The chief event on the program was an amusing act in which a clown, a member of the Jockey club, made love to a pretty equestrienne in a short skirt who rode a barebacked horse. The audience was composed of leading members of Parisian society.

There was a children's fete at Paris polo on Wednesday, although there were not enough youngsters present to claim all the toys so prettily arranged by Mlle. Lejoune. In the hundred-metre race for boys, under 8 years of age, I noticed Bay Potter Young and Boni and George de Castellane. The young Castellane ran well. A flat race for girls of the same age was a charming spectacle.

M. Maurice Raoul-Duval has forsaken Paris polo, as he is going in for political honors.

Sir Edmond and Lady Monson gave a dinner this week at the British embassy. The table was beautifully decorated with roses. The guests included the Russian ambassador and Mme. Nelidoff, the Comte and Comtesse de Castellane, Mrs. and Miss Spreckles of San Francisco, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Childs, Mrs. Townsend, the Baron and Baroness Henry de Rothschild and the marquis de Lau.

A smart dinner and reception was given this week by Mrs. Leishman in honor of Mr. Leishman, United States minister to Turkey, who has arrived in Paris, in order to be present at the marriage of his daughter to the comte de Gontaut-Biron.

FAKIR FOOLS KING.

He Trims Up a Canine and Sells Him to the British Ruler.

LONDON, June 25—(Copyright Cable.)—The latest victim to the wiles of the dog fakir is King Edward. Not long ago his majesty bought a dog, to which he had taken a great fancy. When later on he went to the royal kennels to see his new pet, he was unable to recognize it. The elaborate results obtained by trimming, combing and cropping had disappeared and the dog stood revealed with all its bad points. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction among fanciers at the increase in show dog faking and the Kennel club is shortly to be approached, with a view of having it become known when a dog is faked.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

CAPITAL FOR BUSINESS PURPOSE—One of the leading features of my business is to consider for investment capital for good enterprises, especially manufacturing, in which cases I am usually successful, but not always. Prefer proposition already in successful operation, but requiring additional capital to keep pace with a healthy demand. Projects, untried and commercially unknown, especially if presented by persons totally without capital, cannot be considered, because the investor would not accept them and it would only be wasted energy on my part to submit them. This proposition is made only to a solid, successful and energetic type of business men of good reputation who have faith in their own enterprises and desire my services for the legitimate requirements of their business. To such persons I would extend an invitation to call upon me in perfect safety as to the matter of undue publicity. If, after consultation, incorporating should be deemed advisable, that feature can also be transacted through my office in proper legal form.

Values on Some Streets Have Trebled In the Last Five Years.

BUSINESS CENTERS FORMED

Over 100 Flat Buildings Erected In Six Years—Residence Districts Spreading Out Rapidly—Better Transportation Facilities Provided.

A city whose population numbers over 18,000 and whose landed property is assessed at more than $11,000,000 can hardly be called a suburb. But Wilkinsburg, which can easily substantiate both these claims, owes much of its popularity to the fact that it is outside the city limits, and for this reason its inhabitants are not eager to become an integral part of Pittsburgh proper. For the town, which has been greatly favored by nature and which today is known as one of the best examples of a model outlying municipality in the state, is making much more rapid progress in many ways than any section of the city of equal area and population.

In a real estate way Wilkinsburg has a most unique history. From the time almost the entire town was owned by James Kelly, and later by the Bank of Commerce, to the present, it has never been a boom town. No flaring advertisements proclaimed its merits and no large amounts of money were spent in hiring agents to talk up its advantages. Instead, it has grown from a meager village settlement to a prosperous city because of its inherent advantages—assets which forced it to the front in the face of the stubborn and narrow attitude of short-sighted early settlers and the strong opposition at times of big corporations. Wilkinsburg presented the largest level area to be found around Pittsburgh, and its nearness to the business center and freedom from noise and dirt recommended it to the notice of thousands of persons who wanted homes in suburban localities. Hence, in 10 years it has grown from 7,000 to 18,000 persons, and today its business population numbers at least 20,000 persons.

Property Values Increased.

No environ of Pittsburgh shows the same conclusive proof in its history that real estate is the safest and most profitable of all investments, in the long run, as Wilkinsburg. Property values have increased at a rate that has made fortunes for the early owners, many of whom were railroad officials and employes and who today count their wealth by the hundred thousand. This enhancement has been most rapid during the last five years. Frontage in Wood street the principal business thoroughfare of Wilkinsburg, five years ago was worth, on an average, $300 a foot. A few corners were held at $400, and some parcels were on the market at $250. But there were few buyers. The man who suggested buying a business site on the east side of Wood street in those days was looked upon as a business fanatic. The old "doctors' row" was preserved intact for years, and below it two squares were filled with residences. Today the average price for Wood street frontage on either side of the street from Penn avenue to the railroad is $1,000 a foot, and some has been sold recently at $1,100. This shows the remarkable increase of more than 300 per cent in five years—enough to persuade the most pessimistic realty investor that good real estate is a fortune-maker.

Other streets of Wilkinsburg have made almost as great advances in values. When the Mellons invaded Wilkinsburg, three years ago, they paid $300 a foot for their rights of way for the street car line. Five years ago the average price between Wood and Center streets was $200 a foot. Now frontage near Wood street is held at $700 to $800 a foot, and the average for the section mentioned is fully $500 a foot. The old Gordon property, now owned by A. J. Puffinburg, advanced from $800 a foot at the rate of $100 a foot a year and is now held at $950.

How Prices Took Jumps.

Property in Rebecca street sold five years ago for $175 a foot. Today it is worth $300 to $350. Trenton avenue holdings between South and Biddle avenues sell now for $100 to $200 a foot, while five years ago they brought only $40 to $60. In the First ward, west of Center street and north of Penn avenue, where is now the finest residence section of Wilkinsburg, properties have advanced in three years from an average of $60 a foot to $80 to $150. In the new Biddle avenue district, the handsome plateau adjacent to Braddock avenue, 50-foot lots sell now at $3,500 to $4,500 each. Nine years ago George W. Guthrie laid out this property and sold the lots for $750 each. The beauty of the place and the kind of houses erected, costing on an average $8,000 each, have forced values up rapidly, and few choice lots are for sale. Another section where residence property has gone up by big jumps is the Singer neighborhood, in Wood street, where lots now bring $100 to $120 a foot that were sold only two years ago for $50 a foot. Three years ago property in outer Penn avenue near Swissvale avenue was worth $110 a foot. Today it is quoted at $230 a foot, and, owing to the new Verona street car line, the district is fast becoming a good business center. Values in Edgewood, which practically belongs in Wilkinsburg territory, have advanced along its most beautiful street, Maple avenue, until today vacant lots near homes that cost $15,000 to $20,000 are selling at $110 to $120 a foot.

The foresight of some of the earlier investors has been amply rewarded in this steady enhancement of values. Jacob Weiman, now a millionaire property owner of Wilkinsburg, has stuck to real estate in his own town as the surest means of amassing a fortune. A. W. Duff, another pioneer real estate investor has found this line of security much more profitable than he first anticipated. Later investors who have specialized in different kinds of real estate ventures have been notably successful. Among these may be mentioned William M. Brinker, who pioneered apartment-house building in Wilkinsburg; A. J. Puffinburg, who started the movement to build more and better business blocks; James A. Wilson, who has built probably more apartments than any other Wilkinsburg investor; Thomas A. Coleman, who in the past decade has built over 250 houses in Wilkinsburg; J. R. Wylie, who added a very desirable residence district to the Third ward by building up Hampton place with houses costing on an average $4,500 each, and H. H. Freeman, another very successful builder of flats.

Great Demand for Flats.

In the matter of apartment houses, Wilkinsburg has a second special claim to real estate notoriety. Within five years the apartment house idea has grown so rapidly there that in spite of the rapid building brokers have been unable to meet half the demands for flats. When the Colonial apartments at Hay and Rebecca streets were built six years ago by William M. Brinker, shrewd business men nodded their heads wisely and pointed out the inevitable wreck of the owner's hopes. But the 45 flats were rented almost before the building was completed, and so profitable was the venture that dozens of similar projects have been undertaken all over the East End suburb. At present there are at least 100 flat buildings and apartment houses in Wilkinsburg. These range from the modest three-story building with six flats and costing $8,000 to $10,000, to the pretentious six-story apartment hotel costing from $75,000 to $100,000.

Wilkinsburg was kept from growing at first by the attitude of the early property owners who steadfastly opposed every improvement and adhered to the policy of "stick and wait." The Pennsylvania Railroad Company also had a hand in making the progress of the borough slow at the start, for its meager passenger service kept away many would-be buyers, and its policy of pushing the grade crossing bluff in the way of any prospective street car line held back many other improvements. When the first street car line stopping at Trenton avenue entered the town in 1897, it started a train of buyers that pushed prices up with a vengeance. Four years later the Mellons solved the grade crossing by building the "yellow line" through a $75,000 tunnel at Kelly street, and another cause for higher values was added. In 1899 the Frankstown avenue line opened up a large amount of frontage, and the Verona line built last year is certain to bring prosperity to property owners in the eastern vicinity of Wilkinsburg. In the face of these new means of transportation the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has steadily increased its facilities and now offers residents of Wilkinsburg a service that has few equals.

New Public Buildings.

If new public buildings are any indication of a town's growth then Wilkinsburg can be said to be growing as rapidly as ever. A $75,000 school house at Pitt and McNair streets and a $60,000 building at Swissvale and Laketon avenues attest the growth in population. Within two years four large churches have been erected, the German Evangelical Lutheran at Center and Ross streets, the Lutheran in Center street between Ross street and South avenue, the United Brethren at South and Coal streets, the First Presbyterian at Wood and Wallace streets. Two other church buildings have been rebuilt in the same time, the Christian church in South avenue, between Wood and Hay streets, and the Second United Presbyterian church in Hay street. The Second Presbyterians will build a $25,000 church at Mulberry street and South avenue, and the Protestant Episcopalian congregation is now building a $40,000 edifice at Franklin and Pitt streets.

That Wilkinsburg is growing rapidly in a business way is shown by the business blocks recently erected. The Carl building at Wood and Ross streets was erected by Leopold Vilsack at a cost of $145,000. At Wood and Franklin streets the Milligan & Miller building cost $60,000. The Masonic building in Penn avenue was enlarged last year by the addition of three stories, and the Jackson building in the same avenue is a notable addition to the business structures of the town. In South avenue is the new Eaton building as well as the new Casino building. The borough was forced to provide larger quarters for its business and last year erected a $15,000 building in Ross avenue.

Taxes in Wilkinsburg are lower than in Pittsburgh, the rate in the former place being about 15 mills. This does not mean that the municipal improvements are unworthy a large town. Nearly every street in the borough is paved. An automatic sewerage system flushing the pipes twice a day insures a healthy condition in the streets. A paid fire department also helps to make the property owners as well as the tenants feel that they are amply protected. Five distinct car lines to the city with the best train service offer many inducements for the man hunting a home out of the crowded city. To these transportation lines there will likely be added in a year a line to East Pittsburgh and a cross-town line to run from Homestead to the Allegheny river is a project far beyond the "hot air" stage. Already the single track of the new Verona line is proving too small for its business, and a second track is proposed for next year.

A town which has made big fortunes for dozens of real estate investors and is today growing more rapidly than ever, is an attractive field for real estate workers. High rents and a steady demand for dwellings of all sorts, a constant inquiry for good business lots, few vacant properties in the borough limits to threaten higher values, street car improements that will add hundreds of dollars to the value of small properties on the outskirts of the town, natural advantages that cannot be excelled around Pittsburgh and close proximity to the city itself—these are a few of the claims that Wilkinsburg now makes to advance her position as a real estate center of growing importance.

Futile Wooing of Morpheus on a Warm Morning, Amid Strange Sounds.

IN QUIET NEIGHBORHOOD, TOO

Complaint of the Man Who Has to Sleep by Day, Because Employed All Night. Ragman, Peddlers, Schoolboys and Domestics Disturb Him Most Grievously

"I have just had 14 hours sleep in the last four days," said the woebegone-looking nightworker, "and from the seemingly constant increase in the morning noises it looks as if I may never exceed that record, this summer, at least. As you fellows who go to work in the morning walk along the street and see the ordinary everyday street scenes, hear the ordinary sounds of a quiet residence district, you notice nothing remarkable about them. But get home some day at 6 o'clock in the morning, as I do every day of the week, and see if the street sounds don't leave an entirely different impression when you are wooing Morpheus and he flatly refuses to come to your arms.

"In the first place you find the weather so warm that you leave the window shades up to get all the fresh air you can. It is hard enough to sleep in a room lighted by the bright morning sun, without being further disturbed. In the back yard is the Swede domestic beating out a rug and in the adjoining yard is the negro servant girl hanging out the clothes. You hear a few whacks against the rug, then Swedish dialect, in a high-pitched voice floats through the window. It is Trina bidding the top of the morning to the colored girl.

"You hear a voice in response, loud but muffled, almost inarticulate—it is the negress with her mouth full of clothes pins, answering Sweden. 'Whack' goes the rug beater, then the Swedish arms grow tired and again the voice floats in at the window. This lasts for a half hour. You wouldn't mind if the rug got a vigorous beating, for then the operation would soon be over, but you do hate that mixture of rug beater and saw-like voice lasting through the hour.

"The voices have been friendly, but just as you are dozing off you hear a loud soliloquy, evidently Africa in an angry mood. Try to shut out the sound as you will, you will soon perceive that the negress is complaining that the spotless clothes she has just hung out are covered with dust from the rug. Presently Trina emerges from the house and instantly a double storm of Swedish dialect and negro talk dashes through your fly screens, and sleep is off for another half hour.

The Swede's duties call her indoors and you compose yourself to sleep. 'R-a-g-s, old i-r-o-n.' It is the junkman, and for another 10 minutes you hear him and the neighbors, perhaps your own estimable better half, chaffing on the price of rags. The junkman leaves.

"'S-t-r-a-w-b-e-r-r-i-e-s!'

"You start from your doze, despairing, for the peddlers have begun their rounds, and for an hour you are regaled with the names and prices of vegetables and fruits of the season. Gradually your ears accustom themselves to these noises by the peddlers, and you close your eyes. 'Now I'll get some sleep,' you think.

"Thump! You half jump out of bed. What was that? It sounded as if somebody had struck the head of the bed. 'Thump' it goes again. You're living in a frame house at a corner and the side of the house is up against the street. It's only schoolboys, now on vacation, playing handball against the wall. You approach the back window cautiously—you don't want the neighbors to see you in deshabille—and your yell startles the boys. They play handball no longer, but they start a baseball game in the street, and while their shouts disturb you sufficiently, the agony is intensified by the certain knowledge that the wicked shavers have planted their first base at your young catalpa tree and every time one of them runs to first he grabs the sapling and swings himself around it, threatening to tear it up by the roots.

It's All Off Now.

"Even these noises become so familiar that the numb brain drops off into a doze.

"'Don' stay mad, Trina. I'se got my upstairs work done. How's you gettin' along?'

"'Ae ben nearly finished, 'Cindy. Dis ees mae afternoon off. Ae bet I beat you getting troo mae work.'

'Thank goodness, that's the last of Trina and Africa. You doze off in earnest and begin to sleep to beat the band.

"'Papa, det up!'

"It's young 3-year-old, sent by his mother to wake you. You look at your watch. It is time to get up, sure enough, but you have had only three hours' sleep."

FIGHTING BANDSMEN TO BE AT TRACTION RESORT

Miss Alice Raymond, Cornettist at Calhoun Park.

Sunday crowds at the trolley parks will have plenty to entertain them. The Sixteenth regiment band will be at Calhoun today. This is the band that went to Porto Rico. The Dixie Troubadours will be at Calhoun also, and excepting the dancing and acrobatic work, will repeat the bill they have been giving at Southern. With them will be Miss Alice Raymond, the cornettist.

Oakwood's patrons will be entertained by the Royal Italian band, which was especially engaged to play at the Swissvale carnival. Several of the members will play solos. On the list of special concert artists is Horace Mentzer, the entertainer. The Italian Citizens band will play this afternoon and evening at Southern park, with the Imperial quartet singing.

Southern park's show for the week, beginning Monday evening, will be the Bryant & Saville minstrels. These include the Troubadour Four, the Great Weitzel, hoop manipulator, and Elliott & West, singing, dancing and talking comedians.

Kennywood will have band concerts this afternoon and evening by the Homestead Library band. In the auditorium of the steeplechase building there will be cinematograph pictures of the oriental war, the eruption of Mount Pelee, and other historic subjects. Miss Brooke Eltryn will sing illustrated songs. Thompson, the famous high diver, will be the star feature of the week.

GREYS TO HOLD RAFFLES.

Automobile, Piano and Watch to Be Chanced Off During Labor Carnival.

The Duquesne Greys of Pittsburgh have announced that the automobile, piano and gold watch which was once offered for raffle will positively be chanced off on July 9, 1904, the last night of the United Labor carnival to be held on the South Side. The Greys have had once to postpone the consummation of this event, owing in part to business depression, and also to the fact that some person had announced through the papers that the articles had been raffled, thereby injuring the sale of tickets. The organization is determined to dispose of the articles, and is taking this means to secure money to properly represent Pittsburgh at the St. Louis fair.

The Greys have a booth at the carnival for the sale of tickets, and will give special drills on each Tuesday and Friday evening during the two weeks.

"UNCLE JOE" CANNON THE LIFE OF THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

By L. W. STRAYER.

The man who took the most prominent part in the Republican national convention last week was Hon. Joseph G. Cannon of Illinois, speaker of the house of representatives. From the moment he was introduced by ex-Secretary Root as the permanent chairman and faced the Coliseum audience to deliver his speech, until he declared the convention adjourned sine die, Mr. Cannon was the life of the meeting. Tall and slim but full of life and activity he was the youngest man of 68 years in the convention. He is as active of tongue as he is lithe of limb and his little introductory speeches were bright and witty.

It is no reflection upon Mr. Cannon's dignity that everybody speaks of him as "Uncle Joe." For years he has been known by this familiar title among the men with whom he sat in congress and since his elevation to the speakership and the public became better acquainted with him, he has become to the people at large "Uncle Joe." He does not resent it; in fact he is one of those democratic men who like that sort of thing. Just as Lincoln was known as "Abe" and Senator Hanna came to be generally spoken of as "Uncle Mark," so the familiar term applied to Speaker Cannon is one of affection and does not in any respect reflect upon the dignity of the office he holds.

When Chairman Cannon first addressed the Coliseum audience he caught the crowd at once by remarking that he had written a 2,500 word speech, but had neglected to memorize it. However, he soon got on to the text and followed it pretty closely. His gestures could scarcely be called Delsartean, but they are certainly expressive. To emphasize a statement "Uncle Joe" shakes his head terribly and wags his finger or his fist at his audience in a way that cannot fail to attract attention, as much as his words do. He is not what you could call an orator, but his earnestness never fails to impress his hearers and his speeches are always full of wit and humor of the homely kind that appeal to all.

As he introduced each of the speakers to the convention he prefaced the introduction with a few remarks, always timely, which added to the enthusiasm with which the speakers were received. When Senator Chauncey M. Depew of New York rose to second the nomination of Senator Fairbanks for vice president, Mr. Cannon introduced him "not as senator, but Chauncey Depew." Whereupon, Mr. Depew smiled and bowed his acknowledgments. He is not the sort of man either whose dignity is offended by being spoken of as "Chauncey."

If "Uncle Joe" were a baseball pitcher instead of a statesman, he would be known as a southpaw. He is left-handed and wields the gavel with that hand, at the same time keeping his right hand busy gesticulating in assistance to the gavel. Down in Washington, when he is standing behind the speaker's desk, he presides with a beautiful little ivory gavel, apparently a mere toy, but still with sufficient weight and strength to still the most turbulent scene in the house. On last Wednesday, when Temporary Chairman Root turned the convention over to Mr. Cannon as permanent chairman, he handed the speaker a gavel that had been presented to the chair by an industrial school. It was a huge mallet, the head of it fully eight inches long and three inches in diameter. It resembled the ordinary "bung starter" used in saloons to open beer kegs and as "Uncle Joe" took it he looked amused and examined it critically. Then he laid it carefully on the chairman's table, but during the remainder of the proceedings he used a smaller gavel, one better suited to the chairman's methods in presiding. For when he is in the chair Mr. Cannon scarcely lets the gavel out of his hand. In addressing the convention he would walk out to the front of the stage and as he spoke and gesticulated, the gavel would describe wide arcs through the atmosphere, made possible by the length of his arms.

"Uncle Joe" is a plain spoken man and sometimes his language is very forceful and not just the kind that could be quoted verbatim in the newspapers. I remember on one occasion just after it was known definitely that he was to succeed D. B. Henderson as speaker, that I went to Mr. Cannon to inquire his views upon a certain project. If he favored it, he might make such committee assignments as would result in a bill being reported to the house; but if he was against it there was not much chance of it getting through.

"Young man," said he, "you know I am not speaker yet, and I do not want you to quote me on this subject. However, I have no objections to telling you personally what I think about it." And he proceeded to tell me his views in such forceful terms as left no doubt as to where he stood. When I rose to go, he again cautioned me not to quote him. There was no need for it, however, as there was no probability of me using his language; at least not without a great deal of careful editing.

But it should not be understood that "Uncle Joe" is a vulgar, profane man. On the contrary, he is one of the pleasantest and kindliest of men, though frank and blunt in his manner. The fact that he was chosen to preside over the house of representatives, a position next in power to that of president, did not swell his head. He wears no frills and doesn't bank much on formality. He is still plain "Uncle Joe" and the members of the house he speaks of as "the boys." Fully half of them he calls by their first names. One of his closest personal friends is John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, the Democratic leader in the house, whom the speaker always addresses in private conversation as "John Sharp."

Mr. Cannon knows the value of poker hands, as many of his cronies in Washington can testify. When he introduced Gov. Pennsypacker to the convention, he remarked that he had held three of a kind that day, meaning ex-Gov. Black of New York, ex-Gov. Cotton of Minnesota and ex-Gov. Bradley of Kentucky, and he said he wished now to present the fourth, Gov. Pennypacker of Pennsylvania. The manner in which he stirred up enthusiasm in the convention and added life and vim to the proceedings was the subject of favorable comment among those who attended. "Uncle Joe" made thousands of additional friends in Chicago and he is now one of the best-known men in public life.

MT. OLIVER RESIDENT PREFERS WATER TO MILK

Costly Experience Taught Him a Lesson He Will Never Forget.

A man living in Mt. Oliver has a large family of small children. The water company, according to his opinion, was retarding their growth. Their health was being impaired by the said drawn from the water spigot. To overcome this obstacle to their growing up in robust health he decided that hereafter they drink nothing but milk.

He ordered his wife to get a sufficient daily supply, so all could ignore hydrant water, which the wife did. The children enjoyed the change in the family menu, as did the milkman. The children's healthy apparently improved with the new diet and the father was happy until the milkman produced a bill for a month's consumption.

Then he ran his fingers through his hair and said a few unmentionable words. After he had cooled down from the effect of the surprise at the enormous bill, he decided to buy a cow. This he did for $65.

This fact delighted the children even more than the order to drink no water. The cow was kept in the stable, which was formerly used as a coal house. Being without exercise and fresh air the animal failed to produce sufficient milk to supply the demands of the little ones. The father was advised to allow the children to take the animal along the roads to eat grass.

Thus the children were given a true realization of country life when the animal was turned out of the stable. The children were too excited with joy to allow the cow to eat, but kept it on a run for nearly a mile, when things took a sudden turn. The cow entered a gate that led to a private residence, wading through a garden well cultivated with garden truck. She picked off the tops of several cabbage plants, trampled down the onions and tore up the lettuce by the roots. The children were unable to get the animal out of the garden until everything was ruined. Then she left with a run and started down the road in an ostrich trot fashion. Presently she espied another entrance to a garden feast. In this place she literally destroyed everything of value.

The next morning the Mt. Oliver resident was visited by two people who demanded reparation for the damage done. Their bills were three times more than the cost of the cow and several times more than a month's milk bill. Their demands had to be paid immediately or they would resort to law, which is generally expensive. The Mt. Oliver resident paid the bill, sold the cow and the children are drinking water.

of some kind are the heritage of nearly everyone, from the infant and the colic, to the middle aged and the distressing, miserable headaches, to the aged with nervous, muscular and rheumatic pains. A remedy to relieve in all cases must be founded on the right principle, and that accounts for the wonderful success of

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

They never fail to cure all cases of pain, because they treat the Pain Source—the nerves. By soothing the irritated nerves they lessen the tension, build up the strength and set the blood coursing through the veins, and thus allay all pain.

"Periodic headache, that unfitted me for business several days at a time, has been my life experience. I found first relief in Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills, and since then I invariably ward them off by taking a pill when I feel them coming on."

HOSPITAL FOR DISGRUNTLED CLOCKS HOBBY OF GRIMTHORPE

Built Great One at Westminster Which Scarcely Varies One Second in Week.

LIKES TO MEND WATCHES

When Member of Parliament He Carried Home Bad Timers of Colleagues to Fix—Has Fine Collection at County Seat—Now 83 Years Old.

LONDON, June 11.—Lord Grimthorpe, who celebrated his 88th birthday the other day, is well known in this country on many accounts, but perhaps most famous on account of his enthusiasm over—clocks! He probably is the best posted man in England on clocks and other timepieces; has written several books about them and made their study a life-long pursuit.

At Batch Wood, St. Albans, his country seat, he has an extensive workshop filled up with every requisite for the pursuit of his favorite hobby, and in former days, when attending to his legislative duties at Westminster, he frequently carried home with him the watches of brother parliamentarians that stood in need of hospital treatment. To whatever political party a member belonged, Lord Grimthorpe was always willing to set his timepiece right for him.

If this peer could have his way he probably would make it a misdemeanor publicly to exhibit a clock that is not a good timekeeper. "A public clock," he once declared "should not be allowed to vary more than five seconds in any week." That this is an ample margin Lord Grimthorpe has demonstrated in the great timepiece at Westminster, which he himself designed and which goes with a weekly variation of scarcely a second.

Church restoration is another of his hobbies but in this his achievements have hardly been so fortunate. He spent a pile of money in repairing St. Albans abbey and bringing it up to date. As a tangible and enduring memento of his labors he added to the adornments of the west porch several sculptured representations of his own physiognomony. But instead of the popular applause that he had anticipated his efforts evoked a storm of derision and it was generally maintained in artistic circles that the old church would have fared much better if his lordship had kept his hands off it altogether. The controversy resulted in the addition by one lexicographer of a new verb to the dictionary, "to grimthorpe," which according to the definition appended, means to spoil an ancient building by restoring it. Also some irreverent critics made free with the strenuous peer's name and dubbed him Lord "Grimfault. But that he meant well nobody disputes and in his own person he has strikingly demonstrated the value of hobbies as an aid to longevity.

HIS FRIENDS GONE WITH HIS MONEY

Marquis of Anglesey Dying of Incurable Disease at Shabby Hotel on Continent.

GREAT ESTATE INVOLVED

Would Take 25 Years of Entailed Income to Square Accounts With His Many Creditors—Secret of Sale of Marlborough Pictures.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]

LONDON, June 25.—Scarcely any event in recent years has so startled society as the revelation of the hopeless bankruptcy of the Marquis of Anglesey as revealed in the first meeting of his creditors.

Hiding in some shabby hotel on the continent, bereft of income, and of the jewels, loved of his soul, drifting near the line of actual poverty and slowly dying of an incurable disease, the marquis is today the most pitiable of all figures.

His liabilities, it was shown, reach $2,500,000.

Against this sum he had life insurances of $1,000,000. The insurance companies refused to accept any further risks even at a premium of 30 per cent.

The Anglesey estates yield nominally an income of a little more than $500,000, but when mortgages and jointures, including one of $50,000 per annum to the Marchioness of Anglesey, have been deducted, there remains an income of only $50,000 a year.

The decision of the creditors to throw the whole estate into bankruptcy will deprive the marquis of this income for 25 years in the improbable event of his living out his full term.

Creditors and friends are asking what has become of the proceeds of the great sale of jewelry held only a few days ago before the marquis went abroad.

One passage in the bankruptcy proceedings is full of a grim truth of the forlorn position into which his extravagances and unspeakable eccentricities have led him.

"Has the marquis any friends who will assist him?" asked a creditor.

"The marquis has no friends," was the reply of his attorney.

The secret of the recent sale of a few pictures from the collection owned by the Duke of Marlborough, including a good Hobbena, some fine examples of Flemish masters and Hollis's well-known "Gladstone," is out at last.

It was the duchess, who, with characteristic American energy, expressed her dislike for "a lot of old pictures that no one wanted to see."

And as the Vanderbilt money rules at Blenheim the pictures were at her order promptly banished. Examples of the modern French school are more to the taste of the woman who now occupies the place of Sarah Jennings.

BARON ALFRED DE ROTHSCHILD HAS PRIVATE FIRE BRIGADE

His Great Collection of Animals and Fleas Must Be Protected at Any Cost.

NEW AUTOMOBILE ENGINE

Can Make Speed of 30 Miles an Hour and Throws 300 Gallons of Water a Minute—Also Protects His Great Mansion.

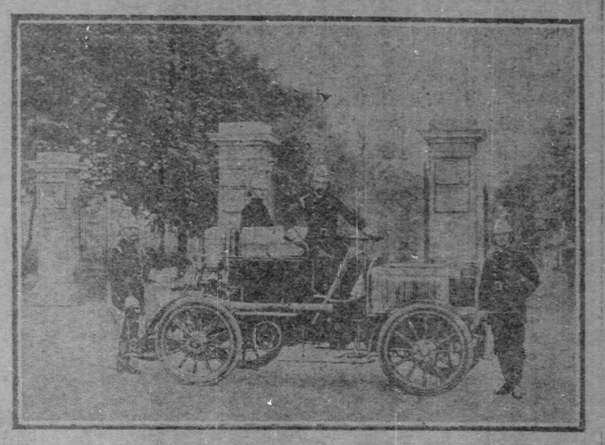
LONDON, June 11.—That enterprising nobleman, Baron Alfred de Rothschild, for some time has possessed, at his country place in Buckinghamshire, a fire department of his own whose equipment has excited the envy of his wealthy neighbors, but recently he has supplemented it by the addition of a motor fire engine, and can now boast that he has by long odds the most up-to-date and efficient private fire department in the United Kingdom.

Today the engine—which cost $5,000—and its capable crew are housed at Tring park ready to extinguish anything from a fire among Walter Rothschild's pet fleas, to a serious blaze in the great mansion so famous throughout England as the place where the "week-end" was invented. The men in the accompanying picture, wearing the uniform of the London Metropolitan fire brigade, made the official test of the apparatus before it was shipped to Tring.

The engine is built for hard service with the minimum of wear and tear. With running gear of the best known to automobile construction, it can carry eight men and a good supply of hose 30 miles an hour on the road and when the energy of the powerful motor is turned upon the pumps 300 gallons of water per minute pour from the nozzles.

It is no wonder that the baron bought the best he could, for besides the palace in which he lives, he has to protect the greatest private natural history collection in the world, which is the special hobby of his only son, Walter. Although there s hardly an animal above or below the earth of which Walter Rothschild has no specimen, the member of parliament concentrates most of his spare time and a large share of his income on brds and—his fleas. Only last August he offered a reward of $5,000 for a perfect specimen of the flea which makes life interesting for the Arctic fox. So far as known, however, that particular flea is still at large.



A MOTOR FIRE ENGINE.

Built for Lord Rothschild, who has added it to his private fire department.

Nor is this the only part of the collection in which fire would mean ruin. Beside his numberless cabinets of dead specimens, in quarters of special construction animals of every sort abound, many of them too wild to roam about the park, and an outbreak of fire in this "zoo" unless promptly controlled would soon undo the work of more than 25 years.

BURIED MORE THAN 2,000 YEARS AGO, EGYPTIAN ART WORKS UNCOVERED

Were Concealed by the Priests of Amon Before the Destruction of Thebes.

ARE PERFECTLY PRESERVED

Fresh Discoveries Are Being Made Daily at Karnak—Beautiful Statuette of Isis Nursing Horus Is Superb—Specimen of Eighteenth Dynasty Art.

(From a Staff Correspondent.)

CAIRO, June 1.—Unnoticed and comparatively unknown, there now are lying at the new Museum of Antiquities here over a hundred recently unearthed statues and statuettes the results of one of the richest discoveries yet made of ancient Egyptian works of art. The specimens range from the Fifty dynasty to the Graeco-Roman period and their value is greatly enhanced by the fact that they are all in an excellent state of preservation. Fresh accessions to the collection are constantly arriving.

They come from Thebes, that city whose temples and monuments, even in their ruin and desolation, reveal as nothing else does the glories of ancient Egyptian civilization. When Ptolemy Soter II, about 80 B. C., decreed the destruction of the city, the priests of the great temple of Amon, in their despair, collected all their most precious works of art and buried them underground. Mr. Legrain, who has for a long time been engaged in the restoration of the fallen columns of the Hypostyle hall of Karnak, found two years ago some fine statues lying under the Nile sand and mud in a stretch of ground about 100 yards square which had no buildings upon it. It was just such a spot as the priests would have been likely to chose for concealing their treasures.

The extensive excavations begun on this same spot in the latter half of December, 1903, seem to fully justify his supposition. Since that date something like 140 statues and statuettes have been here recovered. For over 2,000 years the waters of the Nile have risen over them with each recurring season, but although this has destroyed the paint and loosed the gold leaf, no injury has been done to the beautiful carving on diorite, granite, alabaster, green basalt or blue slate. Sir William Garstin, under secretary for state for public works in Egypt, chanced to be at Karnak when some of the best of them were brought to light and ordered their immediate removal to Cairo lest some wily dealer, aware of their great value, might tempt the workmen to purloin them. The work of arranging and labeling these precious acquisitions has been postponed until the return to Egypt of Mr. Quibell, one of the curators of the museum, who is now at St. Louis looking after some specimens of Egyptian art that were sent to the world's fair.

Meanwhile, at Karnak, workmen are making fresh discoveries daily. From the black waters of the Nile recently one of them fished up a beautiful statuette of Isis nursing Horus, a superb specimen of the finest Eighteenth dynasty art. Another interesting find was a seated statue of a scribe of the Twenty-second dynasty, carved in alabaster and as clear as wax. On the back of this figure is a list of kings which Mr. Legrain says will clear up much that is mysterious in this period of Egyptian history.

Another unique discovery, made about the same time, was that of the original model of the famous statue of Rameses II. now in the Museum at Turin. It is half life size, exquisitely carved in green basalt, and in perfect condition. It is a matter of congratulation that all these relics of ancient Egypt, instead of being scatterd far and wide, will be deposited in the museum at Cairo. Spacious and airy and admirably arranged as the new building is it will soon need to be enlarged if treasures continue to pour in as they have during the last 12 months.

Nile tourists will be delighted with the results of Mr. Legrain's labors at Karnak. It is real restoration on which he is engaged. He has with him an army of fellows who, under his direction work as the ancient did, without mechanical appliances, lifting enormous blocks on inclined planes of sand. In a short period he will have finished his task of replacing the columns of the Hypostyle hall.

Mrs. Rosa Adams, niece of the late General Roger Hanson, C. S. A., wants every woman to know of the wonders accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot tell you with pen and ink what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me, suffering from the ills peculiar to the sex, extreme lassitude and that all gone feeling. I would rise from my bed in the morning feeling more tired than when I went to bed, but before I had used two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to feel the buoyancy of my younger days returning, became regular, could do more work and not feel tired than I had ever been able to do before, so I continued to use it until I was restored to perfect health. It is indeed a boon to sick women and I heartily recommend it. Yours very truly, MRS. ROSA ADAMS, 819 12th St., Louisville, Ky."

Any women who are troubled with irregular or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, general debility, and nervous prostration, should know there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other medicine for women has received such wide-spread and unqualified indorsement. No other medicine has such a record of female cures.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am very pleased to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for womb and ovarian difficulties from which I have been a sufferer for years. It was the only medicine which was at all beneficial, and within a week after I started to use it, there was a great change in my feelings and looks. I used it for a little over three months, and at the end of that time I suffered no pain at the menstrual period, nor was I troubled with those distressing pains which compelled me to go to bed, and I have not had a headache since. This is nearly a year ago. I always keep a bottle on hand, and take a few doses every week, for I find that it tones up the system and keeps me feeling strong, and I never have that tired out feeling any more.

"I certainly think that every woman ought to try this grand medicine, for it would prove its worth. Yours very truly, MISS ELSIE DANFORTH, 208 De Soto St., Memphis, Tenn."

Four Cenerations Furnish Three Stationary Engineers

Four generations are shown in the above picture. The family is one of the best known in Fayette county. Mr. and Mrs. William Dunlop have been residents of Connellsville 35 years and came to this country from Scotland. Their son, Robert Dunlop, of this city is at the right, and Robert Dunlop's son, William, is standing behind Mrs. Dunlop. William Dunlop's 8-year-old boy is between his great-grandparents.

All three of the men shown in the picture are stationary engineers. William Dunlop was employed in that capacity at the Baltimore & Ohio shops in Connellsville many years, and since 1886 has been on the retired list of that company. He is 85 years old. Robert Dunlop is chief engineer at McElveen's furniture store in Penn avenue and William Dunlop, Robert's son, is employed as stationary engineer at the First National bank of Uniontown, Pa. SOCIETY

ERSKINE PARK, the estate of Mr. and Mrs. George Westinghouse, in Lennox, Mass., is one of the most delightful and beautiful of the country homes of Pittsburgh people. There on Monday afternoons Mrs. Westinghouse holds her weekly at homes which are a distinctive feature of the season there. Erskine Park abounds with exquisite scenery with its hills and artificial lakes. The drawing-room of the mansion looks out on Laurel Lake, a picturesque stretch of water. So extensive is the estate that Mr. Westinghouse has three gasoline lawn mowers now at work and will add another soon. He was the first to introduce the horseless mower into the Berkshires and took to Erskine Park the first gasoline mower made in this country. The presence of the British and German embassies in Lennox this season will add to the social life. Mrs. William W. Card is occupying Plumsted this season, and Thomas Shields Clarke, the artist, formerly well-known in this city, when he painted in the little studio on the Charles J. Clarke place, in Oakland, now used by the Art Students league, has his summer home and studio in Lennox. The studio at Fernbrook was the scene of an interesting lecture last Tuesday, delivered by George Powell. It was the first of a series on "Country Life" and was attended by the members of the summer colony.

Sorg of Middletown, O., were married on Wednesday and went away on a little wedding trip, expecting to return tomorrow to attend the wedding of Miss Jeannette Nicholson and J. Their home in Squirrel Hill was purchased by Frank J. Hearn, and was shortly after destroyed by fire. Mr. Hearn has erected upon the site one of the handsomest residences in the East End. A couple of years ago Mrs. Leishman and her two daughters, Miss Martha and Miss Nancy Leishman, were decorated by the sultan of Turkey with decorations of the Order of Nichan-I-Chefakat, Mrs. Leishman received the Grand Cordon of that order and her daughter decorations of the second and third degree.

WOMEN MET TO AID THEMSELVES

International Council Was the Greatest Female Congress Ever Seen on Earth.

SEVEN MILLIONS REPRESENTED

Twenty-Two Countries Had Delegates at the Gathering Which Closed in Berlin, and Which Will Have Far Reaching Effects.

The International Council of Women, which closed its quinquennial meeting in Berlin a week ago, represents seven million women in twenty-two countries. Its far-reaching results, it is expected, will be most apparent in Germany itself, where women in their struggle for the best educational advantages, greater liberty of thought and action and more freedom in their political, civil and social status are behind those of other progressive civilized nations.

In commenting upon the position of the women of Germany, who are generally regarded as behind in the march of progressive womanhood, Miss Susan B. Anthony is quoted as saying:

"They are making progress. They are still creatures of tradition but will soon outgrow this. This result will be helped by this congress, the greatest of its kind the world has ever seen."

Mrs. Hannah G. Solomon of Chicago, the president of the National Council of Jewish Women, who went to Berlin as an alternate to the International Council of Women, and also to start Jewish women's leagues in Germany somewhat similar to the Council of Jewish Women in this country, said of the congress just closed:

Nearly All Educated.

"This is the greatest congress ever held. There is enthusiasm in it. Nearly every woman in it speaks English. The German women lack nothing in intelligence, but have a different way of educating themselves. Our foundation in America for female education is broader,

COUNTESS OF ABERDEEN.
Of Aberdeen, Scotland, President of the International Council of Women.

We do not limit our girls to the languages and playing the piano. If the German woman is educated she is a specialist. They specialize here more than in the United States. They are now in the position that we were in 10 years ago. Too often the German man thinks of his wife as a doll or a cook. That will change in time, perhaps sooner than most people think. In Germany the women are struggling for their rights. In America we are struggling for the right to perform duties."

The first quinquennial congress of the International Council of Women was held in Chicago in 1893 during the Columbian exposition, when women from all parts of the world were in Chicago. The second was held in London in 1899, when an American woman, Mrs. May Wright Sewell of Indianapolis, was elected president to succeed the countess of Aberdeen, the first executive head of the International Council. The quinquennial just closed in Berlin was the third. The next will be held in Toronto, Canada, in 1909. During Mrs. Sewell's regime 12 countries were added to the roll. The American women were represented at the Berlin congress by no less than 108 speakers.

Formerly an Actress.

The new president, who is also an ex-president, the countess of Aberdeen of Aberdeen, Scotland, has been a great leader in the advancement of women in England, and recently worked for the measure granting full parliamentary suffrage to the women of that country. Frau Marie Stritt of Dresden, the new first vice president, is also president of the National Council of Germany. She was formerly a popular and charming actress, but now gives her time and attention to her home and her literary and philanthrophic interests. The other officers elected include the second vice president, Mme. Jewell Seigfried of Paris; third vice president, Frau Retzius, Stockholm; treasurer, Mrs. William Sanford, Toronto, Canada; corresponding secretary, Miss Gordon, Scotland, and recording secretary, Miss Kramer, Holland.

The council represents women of almost every color and tongue, every form of religious belief, every condition under every form of government and they discussed during the Berlin congress a range of subjects from arbitration and international peace to topics more nearly allied to the home and the purely home interests. American women were represented by Mrs. May Wright Sewell, former president of the International council; Mrs. Mary Wood Swift of San Francisco, president of the National Council of Women of the United States; Miss Susan B. Anthony, the veteran woman suffragist; Mrs. H. K. Solomon, president of the National Council of Jewish Women, and scores of others almost equally well known.

The roll call of the nations in the International Council of Women includes the United States, Germany, England, Canada, Denmark, New South Wales, New Zealand, Switzerland, Tasmania, Argentine, Victoria, Austria, South Australia, Norway and Hungary. Japan, Mexico, Chili, Turkey, Peru and Greece are considering allying themselves with this international band of women.

OPPOSE PRISON GOODS.

The question of prison made brooms is again being agitated and strong efforts are being made by the Broom and Brush Makers' union to interest labor organizations throughout the country. Local union No. 14 of Amsterdam, N. Y., has issued a circular telling of the unfair competition to union labor. Copies of the circular ware received by leading trade unions in the Pittsburgh district and action may be taken at future meetings. The circular reads as follows:

We take this means of calling your attention to a matter of great importance to us as an organization and urge upon you the necessity of giving us your earnest support. The greatest obstacle we have to contend with is prison-made brooms and whisk brooms made by convicts who are bound out by various states to the prison contractors. There are no brooms made by convicts in the state of New York, but the prisons of Ohio, Maryland, Pennsylvania and New Jersey are flooding the open market with these goods that come into competition with the goods manufactured by free labor and which can be sold much cheaper than those manufactured by legitimate manufacturers.

Amsterdam is the heart of the broom industry and most of the manufacturers are using our union label, and are enabling us in every way to lessen this unfair competition. We beg your honorable body to appoint a committee to try and suppress the sale of prison-made brooms and create a demand for union label brooms and whisk brooms, and wait on the various merchants in your locality and induce them to sell nothing but the same.

A facsimile of our label is printed on this heading and we enclose a list of the manufacturers of this city who are using our label and of whom they can be purchased. Hoping you will not place this on file without granting our request, we remain,

JAMES DILLON, President.
ANDREW COLLINS, Secretary.

PORCH CAFE AN INNOVATION

Pittsburgh Country Club Enjoys Metropolitan Conveniences With the Charming Environment of the Green Fields, the Woods and the Clear Sky.

All the conveniences of the city are combined with the delights of suburban life in the new clubhouse of the Pittsburgh Country club. The romantic surroundings and the environment of clear sky, green fields and wooded hills make a contrast that adds to the luxury of its indoor embellishments. No expense has been spared to afford the sojourners at the County club an ideal rural retreat.

There is no charm about the mountain summer home that is lacking. At the same time every whim of metropolitan life is satisfied. Whether it is to ride to the hounds, play golf, shoot clay pigeons or sit in a quiet corner of the library and read a new book, the visitor will have every desire gratified and find the repose of the fashionable home.

The pictures shown here tell the whole story of the elegance of the equipment of the new club and the beauty of its interior adornment. The decorations are not elaborate, but are carried out with simple taste that makes every room cosy and home-like. The main hallway is patterned after the southern colonial style, with a broad staircase like those in the old mansions of Virginia. The same idea is carried out with certain modifications in the dining and reception rooms. Massive beams of white mark broad panels in the walls and ceilings. The windows are built of the same generous dimensions. These apartments are flanked by great open fire places with mantles paneled with appropriate mural paintings.

An innovation in the architecture of the building is the cafe porch. This is simply an outdoor dining room, the tables being scattered over the broad veranda, while potted plants and vines form a picturesque arbor. Vertical awnings shield the tables from the sun and a cool and attractive summer dining room is provided for every hour of the day. In the grill room, of course, the decorators have departed from the colonial scheme and the room is a typical old-time Dutch room, with deep beamed ceiling, high panels and furniture of antique oak.

The main dining room will answer a three-fold purpose. It makes a banquet hall when the occasion requires and is spacious enough to accommodate scores of dancers when utilized as a ballroom. The Country club will now be enabled to act as host for large assemblages, something it could not attempt in its old quarters in the Phillips farm house.

Kansas Crops Damaged by Rains.

KANSAS CITY, MO., June 25.—Heavy rains have fallen throughout Kansas the last 24 hours, causing more or less damage to crops and flooding farms and railroad tracks in the central part of the state. Several small streams are out of their banks and the towns of Skidby and Gypsum are partly under water. From two to five inches of water have fallen in 24 hours.

SMALL JAP STOOD GIANT WRESTLER ON HIS HEAD

Yama Took Boastful Pride Out of College Champion While the Two Were on an Allegheny County Surveying Corps.

Not the least popular of the accomplishments of the Japanese people, to which many writers of oriental customs are at present devoting much space, is their physical culture system, or, as it is called, jujitsu. Frequent exhibitions of the physical prowess of this diminutive people have been given in various vaudeville theaters throughout the United States. However, the half dozen or more young men who were on a certain county survey corps several years ago recall with mirth a demonstration of the mooted jujitsu that brought humiliation to the biggest man in the company.

The most interesting member of the corps was a Jap who had graduated from the engineering department of Cornell and later had taken a post-graduate course at the Boston polytechnic school. Some part of his name was Yamaguichi, and, for short, the boys called him Yama. And Yama was the most earnest and hard-working member of the corps. His knowledge of engineering was far superior to that possessed by the chief of the corps, yet he carried a chain and tramped doggedly over the hills of Allegheny county for the purpose of getting some hard experience.

Yama was a small person, very modest and not given to talking much. He was an attentive listener and seemed to absorb everything that was said. In the party was a big fellow, Riley by name. Fresh from college, where he had taken high honors in all branches of athletics, Riley lost no opportunity to tell of his past wonderful deeds and of his ability to outwrestle, out-jump and out-box any man he was ever pitted against. Wrestling was his favorite pastime and many an evening, while in a small hamlet or town, he tried his strength either with one of the surveying corps or some country rustic of local fame in the catch-as-catch-can.

One night the party sat about the porch of a small country hotel and the conversation turned to Japan and its people. Yama quietly replied to all queries put to him. Riley inevitably brought up the subject of athletics and frankly declared his disbelief of the tales he had heard of Japanese strength and agility. In the party was a young man now practicing law at the Allegheny county bar. Taking sides with Yama he offered to wager $10 with Riley that Yama could throw him two out of three times in a wrestling match. Riley eagerly accepted the bet, but for a long time Yama could not be persuaded to take part. He had given no evidence that he possessed any skill in any form of athletics during his weeks with the corps. However, he finally consented, and it was agreed, after Riley had condescendingly offered Yama several advantages in holds, that they would first wrestle catch-as-catch-can. Standing a few paces apart they rushed and quicker than it takes to tell it Riley was on his back with the little Jap sitting upon him with the same serious expression upon his bronzed features that always was there. Riley was dazed.

Then Yama amazed all present by announcing to Riley that the latter could take any hold on him that he wished. With a smile of assurance, chasing away the look of chagrin, the young giant walked over to Yama and secured a hold that promised either a broken back or utter annihilation to the Jap, according to the judgment of the spectators. The owner of the hotel protested, declaring that he would not have murder committed in his back yard. After some parley it was decided that the bout continue and the word was given. Like an eel in the hands of a child Yama slipped from the crushing embrace of big Riley and with a few dexterous and lightning-like movements whirled the champion from his feet, suspended him heels-up in the air for a moment, and then calmly stood him on his head. During the remainder of the trip Riley was silent on the subject of athletics.

STRANGE EXPERIENCES OF STATION HACKMEN

Cabbies at the Union Depot Have Many Weird Trips to Make.

The cabmen who can be seen at the Union station every day waiting to have their vehicles hired have been raveling in the recent wet mornings and evenings. The manager who must be consulted before a cab can be hired said:

"It has been very lucky for us that the weather has been so wet during the last few weeks. The showers have come about 9 o'clock in the morning and between 4 and 5 o'clock in the evening. These are the rush hours and it is funny how many people will rather hire a cab than risk a wetting. On the really rainy days we have netted as much as $700 in 48 hours. This is the amount in legitimate fares and most of the drivers get something in the way of a tip. One of our drivers was hired one morning at 9 o'clock and did not return until the following morning at 3 o'clock. I cannot tell what his fare did to him, but his pockets were full of cigars, he had a roll of money and even the horse looked as if it had been getting more than the usual allowance of oats. Occasionally a big delegation will come in and they all want to go to the Schenley hotel. Of course they don't know the street car system, and so we can pile them into busses and charge them $1 each. They could make the same trip on a Bloomfield car if they only knew for five cents.

"The hackman, as I know him, is one of the queerest individuals under the sun. One came to me a little while ago and wanted to know if he could borrow a few cents to get lunch. He got it and after he came back went out with a fare. On his return he asked for a few minutes leave and explained that he wanted to buy a pair of $7 trousers. He had accumulated a roll of money on his trip."

WORKERS OF NIGHT CAUGHT AT LAST

Most Notorious Gang of Criminals in France Are Now Behind Bars.

SCORN NAME OF BURGLARS

Dozier in Case Makes Bunch of Paper 15 Feet High, So Great is Number of Crimes Committed by Them—Some of Their Schemes.

[SPECIAL CABLE TO THE GAZETTE.]

PARIS, June 25.—The "Sinister Band," or "Workers of the Night," as they call themselves, sit at last behind bolts and bars at Abbeville.

This band of criminals, comprising 18 men and 3 women, have long terrorized France unpunished.

The charges against them form a case sensational beyond most crimes of recent times. So numerous are the counts that the papers connected with the dossier of the affair make a pile more than 15 feet high.

The "Workers of the Night" (they scorn the prosaic name of "burglar") have committed roberies of unparalleled audacity in Paris, Rheims, Rouen, Orleans—in fact, in half the towns in France.

Under the leadership of Jacob, the sinister band planned and carried out successfully robberies which enriched them to the tune of hundreds of thousands at a time. They had at their command 100 appliances for breaking locks, mounting to upper windows and opening strong boxes.

A typical escapade was accomplished under Jacob's direction at Marseilles two or three years ago. The method was simplicity itself. Jacob, with three of the band, drove one day to the house of a commissionaire of the "Mont-de-Pietre." He announced himself as the commissary of police and his companions as inspectors, and said he was the bearer of a warrant for the arrest of the official.

"To avoid scandal," he said, "we shall conduct you in a carriage to the plais de justice." The victim saw no alternative but to yield to the majesty of the law. He was driven to the palais de justice by devious routes. Meantime the minions of Jacob pillaged his house and cleared it of valuables worth $100,000.

When sufficient time had elapsed Jacob left the commissionaire under some pretext or other and rejoined his "workers."

The band's audacity led them into many tight corners, but they escaped repeatedly.

At last, however, they have fallen into the hands of the police and are being rigorously guarded.

$500 REWARD FOR WOMEN WHO CANNOT BE CURED.

So uniformly successful has Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription proven in all forms of Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb, and Leucorrhea, that, after over a third of a century's experience in curing the worst cases of these distressing and debilitating ailments, Dr. Pierce now feels fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in cash for any case of these diseases which he cannot cure.

IT STANDS ALONE.—The "Favorite Prescription" stands alone, as the one and only remedy for these distressingly common forms of weakness, possessed of such positively specific curative properties as to warrant its makers in proposing, and binding themselves to forfeit, as we, the undersigned proprietors of that wonderful remedy hereby do, to pay the sum of $500 in legal money of the United States in any case of the above diseases in which after a fair and reasonable trial of our treatment, we fail to cure. No other medicine for the cure of woman's peculiar ailments is backed by such a remarkable guarantee; no other medicine for woman's ills is possessed of the unparalleled curative properties that would warrant its manufacturers in making such an offer; no other remedy has such a record of cures on which to base such a remarkable offer.

Therefore, insist on having Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and turn your back on any unscrupulous dealer who would insult your intelligence by attempting to foist upon you some inferior substitute, under the plea that "it is just as good." Insist on having the article which has a record of a third of a century of cures and which is backed by those willing to forfeit $500 if they cannot cure you.

In cases attended by a leucorrheal drain a solution of Dr. Pierce's Lotion Tablets should be used conjointly with the use of the "Favorite Prescription." They are sold by all druggists, or sent post-paid to any address, on receipt of 25 cents in stamps. Send 31 cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. YORK BANK RESERVES INCREASED NEARLY $5,000,000

Slight Decrease in Surplus, but Total Cash Holdings Are the Largest on Record—Listless Day in Wall Street.

By JOHN O. BAGLIN, Financial Editor.

The New York bank statement yesterday showed an addition of nearly $5,000,000 to the reserves, bringing the total holdings of cash up to $324,281,000, the largest on record. The increase of $21,201,600 in deposits increased the reserve requirements, so that there was a decrease of $417,300 in surplus reserve, but the total surplus stands at $38,452,675, which is the largest for any corresponding week since 1898. The increase of a little more than $17,000,000 in loans was no doubt due to syndicate operations in the bond market. During the week two large transactions were completed. One of these was the floating of the $9,500,000 Burlington 5½ per cent bonds, which were oversubscribed, and the other was the $7,500,000 4½ per cent three-year notes of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company. Currency is still apparently flowing from the country to New York. A rough estimate places the net receipts from the interior for 1904 to date at $135,000,000, an increase of $50,000,000 over the corresponding period last year.

Since the reports have been compiled from the statements made in response to the call of the comptroller of the currency for a report of conditions at the close of business June 9, much attention has been devoted to the showing made by the New York banks in the matter of deposits. The reports for June were called for the same date as in 1903, which furnishes the opportunity for a comparison of changes which have occurred during the year. The reports of the national banks of New York city show that within this period there was an increase of no less than $134,000,000 in deposits due to other national banks, state banks and bankers and trust companies, the aggregate of such deposits being $546,000,000. Within the same period individual deposits increased only $22,000,000, the total individual deposits footing up $526,000,000. In other words, the amount due to other than individual depositors constitutes more than half the aggregate deposits held by the banks. To put it in another way, there are $546,000,000 deposits due to banks and bankers, which is subject to their call and will be taken home in case business requirements demand the money. This is the vulnerable spot in the New York money market. Funds have accumulated in New York because the business of the country has become dull and the national banks of the metropolis are willing to pay a minimum of 2 per cent on daily balances of country banks and trust companies. When the customers of the latter call for additional accommodation, as they probably will be calling the latter part of July and from then on until the crops are harvested, the country banks will draw upon their surplus in New York, and New York will as usual make the announcement that it is coming to the aid of the west and south. As a matter of fact, New York will be simply returning to the south and west their own funds. Then there will be a calling in of cheap 1 to 1½ per cent call money that has been loaned to Wall street and rates will advance. There is little probability that 1904 will witness the repetition of the experience of 1899, when surplus reserves of $42,000,000 at the beginning of June were turned into a deficit by the end of October, but if improvement in business meets expectations during the last quarter of 1904 there will be large drafts made upon the accumulated surplus in New York.

The bank statement attracted little attention yesterday and it was a very listless session of the stock market. The only stock in which there was any activity was Southern Pacific, which opened higher at 46⅜ and rallied to 47¼. Union Pacific also opened a fraction higher at 89, but subsequently sold off to 88½. Consolidated Gas and Metropolitan Street Railway were weak, the former declining 2½ per cent to 192¾, and the latter 1 per cent to 107½. The extreme prices for United States Steel preferred were 96 and 95⅝. The Wabash issues were weak and the debenture "B" bonds declined to 56½. These were the only features of a market the total sales in which fell far below a hundred thousand shares. There was a gradual sagging to values during the final half hour and the close was at the lowest of the day.

The net results of the week's trading were a disappointment all around to Wall street. During the early part of the week there was what is called a "creeping market," in which prices gained small fractions; but nothing approaching a "convention boom" was seen. Toward the latter end of the week there were several unfavorable incidents, including the passage of the interest on the Wabash debenture "A" bonds, poor earnings reported by Baltimore & Ohio, and further evidence of contraction in general business. While prices reacted sharply, they just as quickly recovered, and short sellers were able to cover only at a loss.

Public transactions on the exchange in bonds were comparatively light, except for a few specialties, but reports from bond dealers have been unanimous of a large increase in the demand for better grades of securities and an advancing tendency to prices. Confirmation of these reports is furnished by the presence of bond dealers in interior markets. Pittsburgh has had representatives of several eastern houses during the past week who were looking for good bonds, and they invariably reported a growing scarcity of offerings of the grade that meets the requirements of customers. These conditions are usually followed by an improvement in the demand for the better class of investment stocks, but the thing which at present stands in the way of this demand is the uncertainty as to whether dividends can be maintained at current rates. This reaction in business unfortunately comes at a time when various large railway systems have expended enormous sums for improvements. They now have the facilities for handling increased traffic, but the increased traffic is not to be obtained, and the corporations have not yet been able to cut down expenses to make good the effects of the falling off in gross business. Investors are therefore contemplating the spectacle of larger capitalization, necessitating increased dividend requirements, while both gross and net earnings are falling off. This naturally arouses doubt as to the ability of maintaining rates of dividend established during "boom years." Of course, if the business depression continues into next year, some of the railroads will be forced to follow the example of the industrials and reduce the amount disbursed to stockholders in dividends. On the other hand, if the recovery in business starts in immediately after the harvests, as many persons believe will be the case, dividends will not be disturbed, and there will be a considerable rise in the average of market values. Public opinion is apparently evenly divided on this subject, hence the narrowness of fluctuations in standard stocks and the dullness in trading.

FINANCIAL CHRONOLOGY FOR THE WEEK

MONDAY, June 20.—New York stock market dull but firm in the early dealings, closing irregular. Sales 240,000 shares, of which 62,000 shares were Southern Pacific and 24,000 shares United States Steel preferred. In London Japanese bonds were lower, Russian bonds firmer and consols unchanged. A new $25,000 Transvaal loan was unexpectedly announced in London and discount rates there and in Paris were firmer. Cotton declined in New York to the low price of the year. The first carload of new wheat from Texas arrived at St. Louis and sold at auction at $1 03 a bushel.

TUESDAY, June 21.—Stock market less active; United States Steel preferred and the sinking fund bonds the leaders in point of activit yand strength. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway (the old company) borrows $7,500,000 on three-year 4 per cent notes, paying a bankers' commission. Government crop bulletin shows irregular progress during the past week. Corn growth slow, and cotton in need of rain, but both winter and spring wheat conditions very favorable. Foreign markets irregular. English consols lower, Russian bonds higher, and Japanese bonds unchanged. Opening session of the Republican national convention at Chicago.

WEDNESDAY, June 22.—New York stocks advance slightly, but trading remains very dull. British stocks market almost Japanese bonds decline and Russian bods advance. Call money easy at 1 to 1¼ per cent. Cotton and grain markets firmer. Slight improvement in the iron trade reported. Steel Tubular Company of Pittsburgh make a voluntary assignment and decides to liquidate its business.

THURSDAY, June 23.—Stock market a little more active and prices hold firm under the influence of United States Steel preferred, which is bought for London account. Cotton declines to the lowest price of the year and grain markets also sell off. Call loans made as low as ½ per cent in New York. Foreign stock markets steady. Bank of England rate unchanged at 8 per cent, but open market rate a little firmer. Bank of Bengal reduces its rate from 4 to 3 per cent. Wabash directors unexpectedly pass the interest on the debenture "A" bonds. American Sewer Pipe directors declare an initial quarterly dividend of ¾ per cent, or at the rate of 3 per cent per annum. The nomination by acclamation of Roosevelt and Fairbanks at Chicago had no effect upon the markets.

FRIDAY, June 24.—A sharp break in Wabash securities weakened the stock market at the opening, but prices subsequently recovered and closed firm. In Lodon Russian and Japanese bonds advanced fractionally. Baltimore & Ohio gross earnings for May decreased $478,908 and net decreased $767,247. Wheat advanced on reported heavy rains in the winter wheat section, delaying harvest. Bank exchanges in the United States decreased 4.9 per cent for the week. Commercial failures numbered 227, against 223 a year ago.

SATURDAY, June 25.—New York bank loans increase $17,123,400 and deposits increase $21,301,600. Surplus reserve decreased $417,200. Stock market very dull, and after opening firm, sold off under the leadership of Consolidated Gas and Metropolitan Street Railway. In Pittsburgh Crucible Steel preferred rallied $2 a share to 36.

The Jump in Crucible Preferred.

On sales of only 255 shares yesterday Crucible Steel preferred jumped to 36 and closed at that price bid, a net gain for the day of $2 a share. The total sales for the week foot up less than 800 shares, and these were handled within a range of 33 to 36. There was no explanation for yesterday's rally, and it was all the more conspicuous because it occurred in a very dull market, both here and in New York. It is reported that Crucible officials have been talking much more cheerfully about the present volume of business and outlook, and one of them was quoted as saying that the company could pay a dividend this year out of earnings, but he thought none would be paid until January.

Extra Dividend for Cable.

The directors of the Standard Underground Cable Company, in addition to declaring the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent, declared an extra of 2 per cent, making a total of $4 a share. Both dividends are payable July 5 to holders of record July 4. There have been no recent transactions in the stock, which is nominally quoted at 182 bid.

The Westinghouse Companies.

There are few persons who can state offhand the number of corporations composing what is known as the Westinghouse interests, and most people will be surprised when told that there are 28 separate and distinct corporations in this group, 19 domestic and 9 foreign. These corporations are represented at the world's fair at St. Louis and the Westinghouse interests are sending out invitations to their friends to visit the various exhibits. Compliance with the invitations is a list containing what are known as "The Westinghouse Companies:" Cooper-Hewitt Electric Company, East Pittsburgh Improvement Company, Nernst Lamp Company, Pittsburgh Meter Company, R. D. Nuttall Company, Sawyer-Man Electric Company, Security Investment Company, American Brake Company, Bryant Electric Company, Perkins Electric Switch Manufacturing Company, Union Switch and Signal Company, Westinghouse Airbrake Company, Westinghouse Foundry Company, Westinghouse Machine Company, Westinghouse Automatic Air and Steam Coupler Company, Westinghouse Church, Kerr & Company, Westinghouse Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric Inter-Works Railway, Westinghouse Mutual Brake Company, and the following foreign companies: Canadian Westinghouse Company, Societe Anonyme Westinghouse (France), Societe Anonyme Westinghouse (Russia), British Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, Limited, Traction Power and Securities Company, Limited (England), Westinghouse Brake Company, Limited (England), and the Westinghouse Electricitats Actengesellschaft (Germany).

Activity in Steel Bonds.

The activity in United States sinking fund 5s was the feature of the New York bond market during the week. The total sales exceeded $2,000,000 at prices ranging from 74⅜ to 75¾, and the closing bid yesterday was 75⅝. The range on these bonds for the year to date has been 79⅝, so they are now within 4 per cent of the top price. The next most active issue was Union Pacific convertible 4s, which sold to the extent of $725,000 at prices ranging from 98¾ to 99⅝. These bonds have sold as high as 114⅛ this year and as low as 94½ last year. Wabash debenture "Bs" sold to the extent of $650,000 and declined to 58, a shrinkage of 12 per cent from the high point of the year.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

Aside from the strength of Crucible Steel preferred, there was very little feature to the local market yesterday. Crucible closed at 36 bid, a net advance for the week of $2 a share. Westinghouse Electric declined to 78 and was that price bid at the close. Pittsburgh Coal preferred rallied a small fraction to 58 and closed at 57¾ bid. Manufactures Light and Heat declined to 30¼ and rallied to 30½. The rest of the market was stagnant.

Forty securities were dealt in on the Pittsburgh stock exchange during the week, and yet the total sales reached only 7,735 shares of stock, $24,000 bonds and $3,664.25 scrip. There were more net gains than losses, but as a rule price changes were not large. American Sewer Pipe, whose securities were but recently listed on the exchange, and which declared an initial dividend of 75 cents a share during the week, led the dealings with 1,425 shares at prices ranging from 20¾ to 21¾. Westinghouse Electric was second in point of activity, 1,053 shares changing hands at prices ranging from 78 to 78⅝. This company, as well as Union Switch and Signal, declared the regular quarterly dividends during the week.

James L. Penny has transferred his membership in the Pittsburgh stock exchange continent upon the election of Robert Ostermaier.

Directors of the American Car and Foundry Company will not take action on the common dividend before the first week in July. In the meantime the annual report will be published. It is expected that the net earnings for the fiscal year ending April 30 will be in the neighborhood of $4,000,000, which would be the best year on record with the exception of the preceding year.

On account of the decreased net earnings of the Indiana, Illinois & Iowa railroad, the directors of the railroad have passed the semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent. For 1903 the dividend paid was 4 per cent, while for 1904 only 2 per cent will be paid.

The Commonwealth Trust Company has declared a quarterly dividend of 2 per cent, payable to stock of record June 30.

The Arsenal bank has declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent, payable July 1.

Gross earnings of Missouri Pacific for the third week in June increased $62,000. Hocking Valley decreased $22,942.

The German National bank of Pittsburgh has declared a quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent, payable July 1.

The most important thing locally will be the action this coming week on the semi-annual dividend on River Coal preferred. The market for the stock has given no indication as to what that action will be, trading being extremely dull and the range of prices narrow between 21 and 22. There has undoubtedly been a reduction in the amount of coal mined, prices are lower and we understand that extraordinary expense during the early part of the semi-annual period occurred in the shipping department. All these things enter into consideration when it comes to declaring the dividend. The prepondering sentiment is that the the dividend will be passed or the 3½ per cent rate reduced. If this is done it will in our opinion have a bad effect upon Pittsburgh Coal preferred, since pretty much the same conditions have been present in both the river and the railroad branches of the trade. We would not be surprised, however, if River Coal dividend is passed and Pittsburgh Coal preferred declines, to see United States Steel preferred sell off somewhat in sympathy, because there is a good deal of sympathy between the coal and iron trade. Relatively speaking, the bonded debt of River Coal is smaller and the actual property behind the capitalization is more valuable, so far as comparison with United States Steel.—A. E. Masten & Co.

The East End Savings and Trust Company has declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent out of the earnings of the past three months, payable July 1.

Gross earnings of all railroads in the United States reporting for two weeks of June are $12,859,526, a gain of 4.7 per cent compared with the corresponding period last year. The same roads reported a loss of 5.9 per cent for the first two weeks of May, while roads reporting for the full month of May, including many of the leading systems of the country, show that the States report a loss of 5.4 per cent. The June statement is decidedly the best of any month this year.

Chicago wheat news was strong on Saturday and prices responded. Cables reported sensational and totally unexpected advances at Liverpool, Paris and Berlin, for which there was no definite explanation excepting the report that the import duties into Germany were to be reduced. New York advices claimed there was buying of the deferred futures there on account of bearish crop news. The well-distributed rains arouse fears of a wet harvest. H. V. Jones of the Commercial West contributed a bullish item in regard to new crop movements. He maintains the demand from country mills in the southwest is so strong that it is doubtful if much will reach Chicago in July. As to harvesting, he says, excellent progress is being made. There was also some talk of too much rain in the northwest, but no actual damage was even hinted at. The northwest, however, was a buyer of September wheat. Broomhall cables that offerings of Indian wheat are smaller and at higher prices.

The Monongahela Water Company declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2 per cent, payable July 11. Books close July 1 to July 11, inclusive.

Probably the last silver dollar that will ever be issued by the government of the United States has been coined. The coinage statement for June will show the coinage of about $400,000 in standard dollars. These coins are now all completed in the Philadelphia mint. There is still on hand about 7,000,000 ounces of the silver bullion purchased under the act of 1890. This has been set aside for subsidiary coinage under the provision of the sundry civil appropriation act of March 3, 1903, authorizing the use of this bullion for subsidiary coinage. There is enough of it to coin over $7,000,000 in subsidiary coins. This amount, with the subsidiary coins now in the treasury, amounting to nearly $12,000,000, will be ample to supply the demand until congress has had an opportunity to provide for further increases in the subsidiary coinage.

A prominent Wall street house concluded its review of the situation yesterday, as follows: "The passing of the interest on the Wabash A debentures has ceased to be a matter of comment. Wall street seemingly being disposed not to let this, or any other unfavorable news which has come to light recently, interfere with the steady upward movement in the security market. With the close of the week in sight it can be said that sentiment is of a decidedly more cheerful character than has been evidenced in any one whole week for many months, and the impression seems to be gaining ground daily that the improvement in the market is bound to come, and although operators for the rise are restricted in their enthusiasm by heavy offerings at times, the support has been good in all standard issues.

The secret service at Washington announces the discovery of a new counterfeit $10 United States "Buffalo" note, series of 1901, check letter C, plate No. 103, Lyons register, Roberts treasurer. It is a lithographic production, apparently the work of persons responsible for previous counterfeits on the same issue. The figures in the treasury number are too large and of irregular formation. The portraits of Lewis and Clark appear blurred and scratchy, while the seal and denominational character are highly pink, instead of carmine. The back of the note is poor and the green ink in several shades darker than the genuine.

The Bell Telephone Company of Philadelphia directors have declared a regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent, payable July 15 to stock of record July 5.

GREAT EARNING CAPACITY OF THE MARCONI WIRELESS TELEGRAPH CO.

DOW, JONES & CO., publishers of the WALL STREET JOURNAL, in the news bulletin of June 1st, printed the following statement, which gives valuable data concerning the MARCONI WIRELESS TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The following is from a Marconi source:

"The rapidly increasing importance of the Marconi wireless telegraph as a commercial factor has aroused great interest among both prospective stockholders and the general public, in the prospective earnings of the company. The following estimates give a clear insight into the marvelous possibilities of the new system and its comparatson with the cable system now in use.

"Mr. Marconi in a rent interview pointed out the great profitableness of a wireless news service to steamships both for the Wireless Company and for the publishers of the ship newspapers. One news message will be received by all ships alike at an initial expense of but one message. The ships, however, will each pay the full rate for the service as though separate dispatches had been sent to each. Supplying 1,000 words to 50 ships will bring the revenue of 50,000 words, though no ship unsupplied with the Marconi instruments can receive a word of the dispatches.

"There are 40 transatlantic ships now equipped with the Marconi instruments. Supposing only ten steamships out of all the number to be equipped receive the daily news service, the complete news would require about 100,000 words daily, but estimating only 5,000 words per day at 5 cents each (one-half the present press rate) the daily receipts will be $912,500. Estimating the cost at 10 cents per word, the daily expense would be $500 or annually $182,500. This leaves the enormous net profit of $730,000 annually, even at this remarkably conservative basis. The present contracts of the Marconi Co. for the service are on the basis of 25 cents per word.

"The earning capacity of the prospective commercial transatlantic service can also be estimated from the data now known. The cost of the Marconi system with a terminus in America and Europe is $100,000. This system is capable of handling 30 words per minute with one set of instruments. The cost of cable operation is less than 25 per cent of the cost of wireless. The normal cost of the Marconi system will probably be less than half this figure, but for the purposes herein it can be assumed as equally as large. The present cable charge is 25 cents. The wireless charge can be assumed at 10 cents. As an additional factor of safety, 50 per cent may be deducted from all factors of income and 100 per cent added to all those of expense.

POSSIBLE REVENUE.

One station, 30 words per minute, for one year dispatches, 15,768,000 words; 50% deducted from number of words and gross cost of operation at 10 cents per word gives a gross revenue of $394,200. With three sets of instruments the gross revenue would be..... $ 1,182,600

PROBABLE EXPENSE.

Cost of one station as described $100,000
Plus 100% factor of safety equals 200,000
Interest on this at 5%..... 15,000
Depreciation 30,000
Maintenance and repairs..... 20,000
Cost of operation at 25% of gross revenue of station.... 295,650
Aggregate expense per annum ..... $ 553,650

Thus leaving a possible profit of $630,950 on each station. There are fourteen cable stations working at full capacity. Fourteen Marconi stations required for the world's business would clear as profit $10,000,000

"The great advantage of the wireless system is found in its low initial cost of establishment. The congressional committee of the 56th congress presented an estimate of the probable cost of a government cable establishment totaling $25,176,780. While this was for a cable from San Francisco to Manila. To parallel such a cable with the Marconi system, capacity equally as great, would cost $850,000. There would be a saving in annual interest charges alone of more than $1,000,000 on the total cost of installing the Marconi plant.

"The profitable results to stockholders in such a system can be shown equally clearly. Estimating the present cable revenue at present rates and full capacity, the gross income is $8,760,000 per annum. Conservatively estimating the wireless system capacity and charge at one-half the cable system, the gross income would be one-quarter that is $2,190,000. Estimating the cost of transmission per word as the same, the cable company at the end of the year has a balance available for dividends of $3,045,250, or a little over 12% on investment. The Marconi system, on the other hand, has $978,000 balance available, or a little over 100% annually on investment."

There is no better or more profitable investment than Marconi Securities, offered by us. Great and important progress continues to be made in the development of this enterprise. Marconi has furnished the news for the publication of a daily paper at sea, a distance of 2,000 miles, and kept in touch with both shores of the Atlantic at the same time. The public press of America and Europe have heralded this marvelous achievement over the entire earth and placed the inventor and his invention throughout the world as the greatest, most important and most useful of all the great discoveries of science.

That the public appreciate the benefits of this wonderful system is demonstrated by an article in the New York World of June 12th, in which it stated that the daily edition of 750 copies published on board the Campania, Lord Line, nearly sold at 5 cents a copy, and when the supply was exhausted passengers were offering as high as $50 a copy, in order to obtain important news matter from both sides of the Atlantic.

The MARCONI SYSTEM is rapidly being adopted for all commercial purposes. It is now employed on over 100 OCEAN STEAMSHIPS and by the NAVIES of the leading nations of the world. The U. S. GOVERNMENT has given the Marconi Company a contract to build three stations in Alaska, thereby recognizing it as an absolute necessity. A very important fact is that the POSTAL and WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH companies receive and transmit messages from the MARCONI SYSTEM from each of their 50,000 offices, thus giving the MARCONI COMPANY the benefits of their HUNDREDS OF MILLIONS invested in receiving and operating plants, and thus ensuring the Marconi System at the present time to have an office in every town in the United States and Canada.

We advise immediate application, in order to secure certificates before another advance in price.

To give an idea of the possible increase in the value of the Marconi Securities, the stock of the English Marconi Company, which was first offered the public at $5 a share has since sold at $23 per share on the London Stock Exchange. The AMERICAN MARCONI COMPANY offers as great, if not greater, opportunity and the stock is now on the eve of a pronounced advance.

Applications are received in amounts of not less than $120, and it is advisable that immediate remittance be made. As agents for the underwriters who control the stock, we are enabled to make the present offer, but have only a limited amount of these certificates to offer at the present figure.

ATTITUDE OF WABASH FACTOR IN WALL STREET

Railroads Contribute One-Third of the Total Sales in the Stock Market.

[By Private Wire to The Gazette.]

NEW YORK, June 26.—The Herald this (Sunday) morning says:

Stock market business yesterday was the usual summer saturday affair, with little interest created except in those issues which had been assiduously "bulled" in the fore part of the week. In those securities there was considerable realizing which gave the market an irregular appearance. It was apparent, too, that the cautious attitude of the Wabash directors was still a factor in the market and when the bank statement appeared, showing large increases in loans and deposits, there was a perceptible decline in all the leading securities. The market eased off quickly at first and heavy before and closed strong. Business, however, amounted to about 90,000 shares, with two issues, Southern Pacific and Union Pacific, contributing one-third of the total for the day. Under these circumstances not much significance could be attached to the day's developments.

Figures of the bank statement were not altogether liked by the floor traders, although in other quarters it was pointed out that the end of the fiscal year disbursements usually results in a large increase in loans and discounts. The strength of the foreign exchange has also been based on similar events. The decrease in reserve of $400,000 was insignificant. The gain in cash was up to the preliminary expectations.

There was a big demand for sterling cables on Friday and it was continued in equally substantial proportions yesterday. The demand was stated to be for mail remittances for the mid-year settlements and foreign remittances. Sight bills were in good demand, also, and a sharp advance in quotations resulted. There was no change in the money rates.

FAIR ACTIVITY IN REAL ESTATE

Two Important Downtown Deals and a Great Many Sales of Residences.

HOUSE BUILDING INCREASING

Logan-Gregg Hardware Company Buys Arbuckle's Property in Seventh Street for $185,000—Big Offer for Diamond Street Corner.

A fair degree of activity has prevailed in real estate the past week and fewer complaints of "no business" have been heard. Two large downtown sales went to show that there is still a market for large amounts of money, although it must be admitted it is a narrow one. Both sales were made at figures that were near the top prices for property in their respective neighborhoods. The most interesting deal was the purchase of the Clarke and Porter properties in Oakland for $90,000 as a site for a Masonic temple. The deal insures another fine building for the Oakland district where values are steadily rising. The usual number of exchange deals were put through, most of them being for vacant frontage. In residence properties business keeps up well considering the season. Houses that can be sold at from $2,000 to $10,000 and more in well located are today by far the best sellers on the market, and many brokers have turned their attention to this line of business exclusively. Owing chiefly to the good weather the sales of low priced houses have increased greatly and the week has been probably the most successful of the season. This activity is stimulating house building and in all suburbs there is fully as much building on hand as a year ago. Measured by the standard of 1903 the business of the past six days seems small, but when compared with the corresponding period in previous years, it makes a favorable showing.

House Building and Municipal Work.

The F. W. Dodge Company expresses its views of construction conditions throughout the central west in its weekly bulletin, as follows:

"In the volume of work started during the past week there has been but a slight difference from that which has been tabulated from week to week. There appears to be some slight reduction in the volume of the work being launched, as a very large percentage of contracts which have been awarded during the past few days are for dwellings and a comparatively small number for industrial and manufacturing purposes. This is accounted for, in a measure, by the coming on of the summer season and possibly more, in the municipalities, by rather quiet fall and winter for all kinds of manufacturing enterprises. The predominance of residence construction presents quite a healthy aspect, indicating, as it does, that a large number of people of moderate means are taking advantage of the present time in which to invest in homes. Another feature of the present movement is the particularly large amount of municipal work which is being started. This class of construction is more in evidence now that it has been at any time during the past two or three years, and indicates a general expansion of municipalities which require additional facilities to meet the needs of the growth. The market has remained comparatively featureless. Nearly all supply men, as well as contractors, continue their quiet and persistent hunt for business, and in spite of considerable complaint there is more or less being done. The maintaining of a ware scale, which by a great many is regarded so high as to be almost prohibitive, has had the effect of causing some idleness among mechanics, which is quite likely that in districts where the unions are not in control there will be considerable reduction in rates during the last half of the season. There are in the territory reports of large projects of additions that are likely to come out, but the proportion of work of this character coming along is, in the main, disappointing.

"The total amount of new building and engineering enterprises for which contracts have been awarded throughout Ohio, West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania for the week ending June 22, as compiled from Dodge reports, approximates $1,103,000, against $1,996,000 for the week preceding, or a total for the year thus far of $50,548,000. The figures for the same week last year were $991,000, showing an increase this year of $112,000."

Improvements Booming Realty.

In spite of the dullness that has prevailed for weeks, brokers are looking for a healthy revival in real estate as soon as the uncertainty in the political situation is cleared away. There are many good reasons for this belief. At no time for years have there been so many great improvements projected in Pittsburgh as now, and every improvement means sooner or later a shifting of owners for adjacent properties and a readjustment of values, all of which makes business for the real estate fraternity. The hump removal alone is sufficient to maintain a large amount of business in real estate, for, if it is accomplished, the resulting changes in property and business are likely to be far greater than now anticipated. The projects of the Pennsylvania to raise the Point district and provide an immense freight terminal, and at the same time, remove the long-standing menace to the city's growth, the tracks in Liberty avenue, will bring about some important projects in this part of the city. So, also, will the Baltimore & Ohio improvements. While the Wabash has secured all the property it needs in the city, when once in full operation its elevated open properties along the lower avenues cannot but be beneficial, and property along its line outside the city is already coming rapidly into favorable notice. The Pennsylvania improvements in the East End are also expected to raise property values, as evidenced by the prices asked today. Other important improvements, notably the building of the "Tech" school group, will make new centers of real estate activity. The man who sees nothing but gloom in the realty situation just now would do well to get down his map of Greater Pittsburgh and try to forecast the effects five years hence of these tremendous improvements.

Seventh Street Sale of $185,000.

The largest deal of the week, and, in many respects, the most important sale for several weeks, was closed yesterday through the agency of A. O. Detchon of the Union Realty Company and John A. Sharp. For the firm of Arbuckles & Co. they sold to the Logan-Gregg Hardware Company the property now occupied by the latter concern at Nos. 125-131 Seventh street for $185,000 cash. The lot has a frontage of 71 feet in the east side of the street by 100 feet deep, extending back to Quesna way, and runs back 100 feet to Maddock alley, where it faces 100 feet. The six-story brick warehouse on the lot is a modern fire proof building, erected seven years ago expressly for the use of the Hardware company. It would cost at least $80,000 today. The tenants have occupied the property for many years and their lease ran to April 1, 1909. The lot contains about 8,300 square feet, which makes the figure paid $22.30 a square foot. The adjoining property sold last year for $25 a square foot. A deal for this property has been on for some time, and several buyers were in the field for it, as it is one of the best wholesale properties in that neighborhood.

Record Breaking Offer Refused.

An offer of $40,000 was made a few days ago for the narrow strip alongside the Weldin book store, at Wood and Diamond streets. The property is owned by the Mellons, and measures 9x80 feet. Last year it was leased to a Greek for a very high figure as a shoe shining place. At $40,000 the property would figure at $55.55 a square foot. The offer was promptly rejected, which shows the strategic value of such small bits of real estate when well located. When a modern office or store building is planned for this corner, a thing which may happen soon, the narrow strip now occupied by a variety of stands would be the key to one of the most desirable sites in the city and correspondingly valuable.

Through the East End Savings and Trust Company E. J. Visack has purchased from the heirs of John Herron part of the old Herron homestead in Shaler township for $14,500, or $500 an acre. The part secured has a frontage on the county road of about 600 feet, with a depth of 2,100 feet, and contains 29 acres. It adjoins other land of Mr. Visack, giving him a total in this locality of 175 acres, which is known as a model farm.

Real Estate Company Reorganizes.

Owing to the withdrawal of J. P. Lindsay from the Kearfott-Lindsay Company, a new company, to be known as the Kearfott Realty Company, has applied for a charter. The capital of the new company is $50,000, and it will be officered as follows: President, C. F. Hosford of Butler; secretary and treasurer, W. H. Kearfott. These men, with C. S. Doran and Dr. S. M. Stauffer, constitute the board of directors. The Kearfott-Lindsay Company was formed about two years ago and handled some fine real estate. The new company will do a general real estate business at its offices, 503 and 504 Farmers bank building, but will make a specialty of southern properties. Recently the company negotiated the sale of a large plantation in Virginia, and is now promoting a project to colonize 60,000 acres of farming land in the southwest with representative foreigners.

The Woodland Cemetery association has decided to declare a preliminary dividend of one per cent, payable July 1. This dividend results from the preliminary sales of burial lots in the winter and spring, as the cemetery was not formally opened until Memorial day. Forty-three burials are now been made, and there is more than $3,000 now available to pay the proposed dividend, which may be increased to 1.5 per cent later.

East End Building Projects.

Architect W. A. Thomas is taking bids on a 12-room brick house for S. Graves in Sheridan avenue, near Wellesley avenue, to cost $15,000. Also on a three-story brick apartment house to be built for Mrs. Dora Gerovitz in Fulton street at a cost of $10,000. He also has plans for a colonial brick house for S. G. Porterfield in Kentucky avenue, near Shady avenue, to cost $12,000, and contains 20 acres. It adjoins other land of Mr. Visack, giving him a total in this locality of 175 acres, which is known as a model farm.

Bellevue Company Chartered.

The Penn Land & Improvement Company, with a capital of $5,000, has been granted a Pennsylvania charter. The company was formed to build 30 houses and make other improvements on the Bellevue Terrace plan of George F. King on the eastern boundary of Bellevue. The directors for the following year are directors: R. E. McClure of Bellevue and L. Welsh of Avalon.

L. A. Clark & Co. have sold for L. F. Dierker to A. E. Bender the property, 3141 Brereton avenue, Southside, for $5,300. The lot has a frontage of 24x100 feet, on which is erected a two-story frame building. The purchaser secured this property for an investment.

INSTRUCTION FOR MINERS.

Must Study the State Mining Laws and the District Scale.

United Mine Workers' officials intend that every miner shall be thoroughly acquainted with the state mining laws. The secretary of each local will receive a copy of the laws with instructions to read them at the next meeting. A copy of the district scale is also being sent. No trouble is expected at the mass meeting next Monday morning at Morehead, but the Monongahela River Consolidated Coal and Coke Company is said to be violating the scale. The operators are expected to adjust the trouble.

SEPTEMBER WHEAT UP ONE CENT AT CHICAGO

Talk of Active Milling Demand Strengthens Prices in Board of Trade.

[By Associated Press to The Gazette.]

CHICAGO, June 25.—Talk of an active milling demand in the southwest for newly harvested grain was the chief cause for another net advance of 1 cent today in the price of September wheat. Corn is off ½@¾c. Oats unchanged and provisions are down 2½ to 12½c. As the result of a variety of bullish influences a strong tone prevailed in wheat at the opening. The most prominent factors were higher cables, decreased shipments from Australia and additional rain in sections of the southwest, where harvesting is in progress. Initial quotations on September were up ¾ to ⅞c, at 80⅝ to 81c. Trading was light during the early part of the session, more from a scarcity of offerings than from any lack of demand. Shorts and commission houses were the principal bidders. The selling was largely by scalpers.

As the session advanced a considerable amount of bearish news was received, but it had little apparent effect, the market retaining its opening firmness. On the other hand traders took particular note of all bullish items. Continental countries sustained considerable injury to wheat in Caucasia. An estimate on the world's shipments for the week placed the amount at about 8,000,000 bushels, a low figure compared with recent shipments. Apparently the most influential factor of late trading was a report of a Minneapolis crop expert. In referring to harvesting operations in the southwest, this authority stated that the country milling demand was so urgent that there was little likelihood of any new wheat reaching Chicago during July. The effect of this report was to give added impetus to buying. During the last hour September advanced to 81¾c on the purchase of several million bushels by northwestern houses. There was some reaction from the top, but the market held steady near the close. September at 81¾c. July ranged between 80½ and 86⅝c, and closed with a gain of ⅞@1c at 85½c. Clearances of wheat and flour were equal to 77,700 bushels. Receipts were 303,600 bushels, compared with 304,300 bushels a year ago. Minneapolis, Duluth and Chicago reported receipts of 197 cars, against 301 cars last week and 240 cars a year ago.

Heavy selling of the July option by elevator interests caused weakness in corn. Owing to ideal weather conditions and the break in cash values, sentiment in speculative trading was inclined to bearishness. The market opened firm on higher cables and smaller receipts than estimated. On the advance offerings were freely sold with considerable activity. Subsequent declines soon started downward. The close was almost at the lowest point of the day, July being down at 47½c, after selling between 47⅞ and 48⅜c. September opened unchanged to ⅛@¼c higher at 48⅝c to 48⅝@48¾c, sold between 48⅛ and 48¾c, and closed at 48⅛@48⅝c. Local receipts were 344 cars, with 14 of contract grade.

Provisions were firm early on smaller receipts of hogs and higher prices at the yards. Packers were fair purchasers early in the day. Later in the session the market eased off on profit-taking. Prospect of more liberal receipts of hogs on Monday were a late bear influence. At the close September pork was down 12½c at $13 27½; September lard was off 2½@5c at $7 22½@7 25; ribs were down 5c to $7 77½.

Estimated receipts for Monday—Wheat, 3 cars; corn, 436 cars; oats, 90 cars; hogs, 33,000 head.

The Drygoods Market

NEW YORK, June 25.—The week ended with little more activity in any direction and buyers, expressing their lack of confidence in the situation or in prices. Yet the amount of curtailment which is increasing rather than otherwise, seems to warrant the contention of sellers that they are not warranted in making further revisions. Total imports of drygoods and general merchandise at the port of New York for the week ending today were valued at $9,868,192.

The Drygoods Market

NEW YORK, June 25.—The week ended with little more activity in any direction and buyers, expressing their lack of confidence in the situation or in prices. Yet the amount of curtailment which is increasing rather than otherwise, seems to warrant the contention of sellers that they are not warranted in making further revisions. Total imports of drygoods and general merchandise at the port of New York for the week ending today were valued at $9,868,192.

NEW YORK, June 25.—The market for coffee futures opened steady at unchanged prices to a decline of 5 points under moderate liquidation following rather disappointing European cables and July notices, which were not in the extent of about 40,000 bags. Small Wells Are the Rule in the Lower Southwest

The development in the lower southwest fields are not bringing any new attractions to the front. The deep sand territory is not presenting any new attractions. On the east side of the Folsom district, Harrison county, the South Penn Oil Company has completed its test on the Agnes Looman farm and has a show for a light producer in the Gordon. In the same district the same company has drilled its No. 8 on the C. E. Robinson farm 45 feet into the stray sand above the Gordon and has shut down to move back the rig to the derrick. In the Salem district, Harrison county, the South Penn company's No. 2 on the W. A. Rogers farm is producing 100 barrels a day. In the Berea grit pool, on the Yellow Creek district, the Creaco Oil Company's well on the Stillman farm and the South Penn Oil Company's No. 3 on the Camden-Sommers farm are holding up at 100 and 127 barrels a day, respectively.

In the Milton development, Calhoun county, the McCoach Oil and Gas Company has completed and shot its No. 3 on the J. J. Berkley farm and has a 15 or 20-barrel producer. The combined production of all of the producing wells in the district is now 295 barrels a day.

On the Ohio side, in the Adams pool, in Harrison county, the Ohio Oil Company have completed its No. 12 on the W. C. Adams farm and will have a 15 or 20-barrel pumper. Two miles east of the Plum Run field, in Harrison county, W. Rinsey has completed his wildcat on the McMillan farm and has a duster in the Berea grit. In the Wolf Creek district, Washington county, the Hastings Oil Company and the South Petroleum Oil Company have completed their No. 15 on the Rowena B. Nice farm and have a duster. Martin Morris has completed his test on the Daniel Coleman farm and has a duster. In the Barre district, the M. E. Cameron Oil Company has completed its No. 4 on the J. A. DeLong farm and has a five-barrel pumper from the Berea grit.

Markert & Cunningham have completed No. 3 on the A. M. Pepper farm and have a 15-barrel pumper in the Cow Run sand. In the new development, northwest of Woodsfield, Monroe county, the Southern Oil Company's No. 1 on the George Wahl farm is holding up at 90 barrels a day.

In the development at New Galilee, Beaver county, Pa., Charles Jamison has completed his test on the Martin McGonne farm and M. B. Kerr & Co. have completed No. 4 on the W. J. McGeorge farm, and both are good pumpers. Southwest of Burgettstown, Washington county, the Southern Oil Company & Greenlee have drilled in their No. 4 on the McPeak farm and have a show for a 20 or 30-barrel producer. Near Blackville, in Wayne township, Greene county, the Peoples Gas Company has completed its test on the T. E. Eddy farm and has a small gasser. The Wheeling Gas Company has completed a test on the M. B. Long farm and has a fair gasser.

Foreign Money Markets.

LONDON, June 25.—Money, 1½@2 per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 1¾ per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for three months bills is 2 3-16@2⅜ per cent. Owing to the good demand in the market today and considerable borrowing from the Bank of England increased the supplies. Discounts were maintained, in view of a probable squeeze before the half-year term. The business done on the exchange was quiet. Consols eased on the tightness of money, and rails were quiet. Americans opened quietly, irregular on either side of parity. The passing of the semi-annual interest on Wabash preferred "A" bonds yesterday was regarded as symptomatic of the condition and affected American rails generally. Southern Pacific and Union Pacific were exceptionally firm but inactive. The market closed quiet, but generally steady. Hopeful and Japanese were buoyant. Imperial Japanese government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 96½. Kaffirs were depressed.

PARIS, June 25.—Three per cent rentes 95f 80c for the account. Exchange on London 25 francs 20 centimes for checks. Bank prices on the bourse today were weaker.

BERLIN, June 25.—Exchange on London 20 marks, 40½ pfennigs for checks. Bank rates, short bills, 3 per cent; three months 3½ per cent. Prices were heavy on the bourse today. There was a slight reaction in Russians, owing to the report of failure of the naval sortie at Port Arthur. Russian imperial fours closed at 91.95 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 5.05.

NEW YORK, June 25.—(Special.)—The total payment by government to New York banks yesterday amounted to $6,132,000. Payment by banks to government $2,366,000. ROBBERS OF PAYMASTER CAPTURED WITH MONEY

KINGSTON, N. Y., June 25.—After an all-night chase, the remaining two members of the Italian gang who robbed Paymaster Longyear of the Hudson River Bluestone Company on Thursday were captured at Browns station today. The captured men were in a pitiful condition from hunger and fatigue after their two days' flight, in which they had neither food nor rest. When captured the men had $650, and all but $600 of the amount stolen—over $2,000—has been recovered.

LOCKS REQUIRE MUCH MASONRY

About 7,000 Piles Will Be Necessary Before the Coffer Dams Are Made.

THREE HUNDRED MEN NEEDED

Meanwhile the Water Supply of the Carnegie Steel Company Has to Be Looked After and a Special Intake Pipe Must Be Laid.

The building of a river lock and dam under ordinary circumstances requires considerable engineering and mechanical skill, but when the work must be done without stopping or materially delaying a constant heavy traffic, the problem assumes a delicacy as great as that of rebuilding a bridge without interfering with the use of it. Such are the conditions under which the construction of the new No. 2 lock and dam on the Monongahela river, above Braddock, is being carried out, but those in charge of the work say the methods decided upon obviate the likelihood of the least hindrance to navigation.

The undertaking is a large one from whatever point it is viewed. It involves the expenditure of $650,000. The dam, which is to be of solid concrete, will be 800 feet long, besides which there will be in the neighborhood of half a mile of masonry work in the way of lock and retaining walls. The coffer dam construction will aggregate at least 1,200 linear feet, and more than 100,000 cubic feet, and the extent of the breakwaters and abutments will be as much more. Millions of gallons of water and thousands of cubic feet of mud and sand will have to be pumped and dredged out of the spaces enclosed by the temporary dams, for the construction of which it will be necessary to drive some 7,000 piles. In addition to the vessels employed in transporting material, two steamboats, two large dredge and construction boats and a score of smaller boats and barges are employed, and at least 300 men will have steady work for more than a year.

The work of coffer-damming the space which the locks are to occupy is already well under way. A costly side issue to this work is that of taking care of the water supply of the Carnegie Steel Company's steel plant and furnaces. The present intake strikes the water at about the point where the head of the locks will be. The new one is being cut through the cinder and clay banks to a point 200 feet farther up. The conduit is so large that it requires an opening 15 feet wide and from 20 to 25 feet deep, and on account of the porous nature of the furnace slag through which it passes, it must be floored, walled and bulkheaded against the water pressure throughout its length. The work is being rushed and will cost the government about $10,000.

The coffer dams are constructed by driving piles, connecting them with heavy timbers and siding them up with two-inch planking. The rows of piles are about 10 feet apart and the space between them is filled in with mud and sand dredged from the river. Wedge-shaped breakwaters of piles are made above the upper and to prevent damage as far as possible in case of high water. The dams enclose a space 200 feet wide and 800 feet long on the north side of the river. As soon as they are complete the water enclosed will be pumped out and the river bed graded down, after which the locks will be built like ordinary masonry work. The chambers of the locks will be 360 feet long and 56 feet wide, which gives sufficient length and breadth to admit any vessel ever built for inland waters. The inside lock wall will be 1,169 feet long and the outside one 620 feet.

Work in Three Shifts.

The contract for the construction of the dam has not yet been let, principally because the engineers have not decided on the character of the foundation. A decision will probably be reached soon, however, as it is desired to complete the entire undertaking by June 30, of next year. The dam will be begun on the south side of the river and extended toward the lock. When all but the final section has been completed, one of the lock chambers will take the place of the river channel until both the dam and the other lock are finished. With the exception of the coffer-damming, which is being done by the Dravo Contracting Company, all of the locks and shore work, including the building of the new water intake for the Carnegie Steel Company, is being done by the government. The men work in three shifts of eight hours each. About 125 hands are already at work and as fast as more can be employed to advantage they will be put on. United States Assistant Engineer J. D. Dimmick is in charge of the work.

The building of the new dam a half mile west of the present one at Port Perry was decided upon because of the numerous sand bars which have formed about the mouth of Turtle Creek, and which are a menace to navigation in general as well as being specially in the way of upward bound boats approaching the locks.

NEWS FROM THE MINES.

The production of two Beacon Hill properties at Temple Creek will reach in the neighborhood of $200,000 for the month of June. The El Paso Consolidated will produce during the present month the sum of nearly $100,000, placing this mine today as one of the great producers in the entire camp. The company is now working in the neighborhood of 150 men. The mine will ship out about 750 tons of ore during the month, ore carload of ore a day averaging 25 tons each and it will run in the neighborhood of $130 to the ton. Most of the ore which is being mined from this bonanza is coming from the third level and there is enough ore broken and stored in the different stopes to keep up this production for another month without an hour's mining being done. The Gold Coin mine is the third big mine in the center of the camp. The other property, a near neighbor, is the C. K. and N. mine, which during the month of June will produce 1,000 tons of ore which will show average returns of $55 to $80 to the ton. This property is also in excellent physical condition and two shifts of men are at work. The production would have been much more than this but that the mine was closed for a week during the recent troubles.

Frank Morehouse, the expert mining man, whose examination of mining properties in Mexico has just culminated in a million-dollar deal, has returned to Salt Lake. The proper

A CAUTION IS SENT TO ALL BOILERMAKERS

President McNeil Tells of Trade Conditions and Opposes Making New Demands.

A lively contest is to be made at the coming convention of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Iron Ship Builders over the recent election of officers. The charge was made in Pittsburgh that many votes for opponents to the present grand president-organizer, John McNeil, were not counted. It was asserted that if a number of votes had not been thrown out Thomas H. Flynn of this city would have been elected to the position. These charges reached headquarters in Kansas City, Kas., last week and met with an emphatic denial. The official vote sent out for the principal offices is as follows: John McNeil, 3,429; Dominic Kane, 917; Thomas H. Flynn, 1,239; Bernard F. Lynch, 166; A. E. Cook, 562; David A. Stark, 221.

The convention will open in Chattanooga, Tenn., on July 5 and the lodges in the Pittsburgh district will be well represented. Charles Jenkins, who will be one of the delegates from the helpers' branch, will make a strong fight for representation. He contends that as the helpers are required to pay dues to the International body they are entitled to a voice and a vote on all actions which is denied them under the present laws.

A long communication was received by lodges during the week from John McNeil, president-organizer, with instructions that it be read by the corresponding secretaries at the next meeting of the lodges. It is headed, "Caution," and is addressed to all officers and members of the organization. The communication in part is as follows:

Again, it has become necessary for me as your executive officer to sound a note of caution. All indications point to a slight reaction in trade. Many crafts have already suffered a reduction in wages. Others are resisting reductions of wages and the cause is the introduction of the 10 hours a day where nine hours are the rule. Railroads are reducing their forces, giving various reasons for doing so. Some railroads are reducing their forces are contracting with the American Locomotive Company and other contract shops to repair their engines. When called in question it is doing these things they are generally saving of money, but any reasonable person knows that it is not saving money for a company to close down any shop where they have millions invested and give their work to contractors. Other companies have refused to renew their agreement with our men, claiming they don't wish to be tied up with a contract preventing them from discharging whom, or saying what, is boilermakers' work and what is not. One employer has gone so far as to say, "One boilermaker is the cause of a strike and a strike drives rivets." A large number of our members are on strike, resisting reduction in wages. Lodge 214, Quincy, Mass., is on strike against the introduction of a 10 hour day. Lodges No. 4 and 7 are on strike and have been for the last six months, resisting the reduction of wages and the open shop policy. The members in all the lodges in New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City are on strike, trying to have the standard rate or wages established on that system, and shop rules that will define boilermakers' work. The members in Macon, Ga., have been out for the last six months. Macon, Ga., is also on a strike. Lodge 32 has a number of men on strike. Lodge No. 2, lodge 39, lodge 104, lodge 168, lodge 185, lodge 435 also have a number of men on strike, who are receiving strike benefits. Several other lodges have been notified by their employers of a reduction in wages about to be introduced, which we intend to resist. Among those are all the lodges in district No. 2, Port of New York. Our men are also out on the Atlantic Coast Line and the Shore line, which takes in Albuquerque, San Bernardino, Needles, Winslow (Ariz.) and Las Vegas.

From the above it must be evident to all that caution is necessary, also when we take into consideration that the volume of business the various railroads have been doing, and feel that it is very unwise for any of our lodges to try and enforce an increase in wages at the present time. Under the conditions as set we have lodges who have made demands of their employers, and because we have requested them to defer the matter of demands over until a more opportune time, they come back in no friendly terms. The chance of losing what we have secured in the last few years is much greater than the possibility of increasing the same, therefore caution must be enforced. No doubt one of the reasons for the apparent reaction is the fact of this being the presidential year, which creates an uncertainty in the market, for fear of a change in government. With all of these uncertainties, and the amount of trouble we have on hand, we must keep down agitation and use our power to retain what we have secured in the last few years.

The council wishes it distinctly understood that they are utterly opposed to any reduction, and just as strongly opposed to any demand being made upon the employers until a more settled condition appears in the labor market.

While communicating on the fallen market it is encouraging to have at least one bright spot to refer to, and we have great pleasure in stating that the members of the Southern railroad, which is known as District 13, have been successful in renewing their last year's agreement with that company, and at the same time securing for some of the shops an increase of 10 cents a day. The majority of the lodges and members desire to make a greater demand, but when the officials of the district took into consideration the enormous amount of men we have on strike and the possibility of them being involved in a struggle for an increase of wages they cheerfully accepted the last year's agreement with the addition of a cent an hour for some shops. We congratulate the district on the good judgment displayed, and hope that same will be a lesson to others who are contemplating having their contracts renewed with the employers.

CONVENTION CALLED.

Official Announcement of Annual Gathering of United Garment Workers.

The disturbances in the garment workers' trade in different parts of the country, particularly in the east and in Rochester, N. Y., will result in greater interest in the coming annual convention. Copies of the official call for the meeting were received during the week by the local unions of the United Garment Workers of America. It is said here that the representation will be larger than at any previous convention as the organization has made heavy gains in membership within the past year. The call for the convention is as follows:

To all local unions, greeting:

As the time for holding the annual general convention is approaching, it becomes my duty to issue this call for the thirteenth convention, to take place in the city of Buffalo, New York, beginning August 22 of this year.

As the national union is confronted with the gravest crisis in its history, owing to the organized effort being made on the part of the manufacturers to establish the open shop, and the long-continued struggles in Rochester and Philadelphia against the combined employers, and the serious difficulties that threaten elsewhere, it is the duty of each local union to send its full allowance of delegates. The welfare of every local is dependent upon the efficiency of the national body; hence it is to the interest of each local to be represented at the convention and take part in the deliberations.

Special attention is hereby called to section 1 of article 5 of the constitution, which reads: "Each delegate shall be allowed one vote. No proxy shall be allowed." At the previous convention at Indianapolis much confusion was caused on account of locals being represented by other than members. After a lengthy discussion it was decided to admit such delegates with the understanding that thereafter locals would only be entitled to representation by delegates who are good standing members of said locals.

Article 3, section 4: "Local unions shall be entitled to representation in the convention according to the average membership on which they paid per capita tax for the 12 months ending June 30 immediately preceding the convention, on the following basis: For the first 100 members or less, one delegate, and one additional delegate for every additional 100 over the first 100 or majority or fraction thereof. No local union shall be entitled to more than four delegates."

I also desire to call the attention of all local unions to article 3, section 10: "No local union shall be entitled to representation at the annual convention unless the per capita tax and assessment are paid up to the first day of July next preceding the convention, or unless the local union has been organized at least six months prior to the convention."

A carbon credentials for the number of delegates your local is entitled to. Kindly fill out duplicates and send to this office on or before July 15. Delegates will be notified later of hotel arrangements and place of meeting.

Fraternally yours,
HENRY WHITE,
General Secretary.

P. S.—Local secretaries are requested to inform this office of the number of delegates their respective locals will send, so that we can arrange for cheaper railroad fare if the number be sufficient to obtain the benefit of a lower rate.

AID FOR OLD MEMBERS.

The Cigar Makers International Union May Pension the Veterans.

The Cigar Makers International union was 40 years old last Tuesday, having been formed on June 21, 1864. It has made rapid gains in membership and has frequently introduced new features of benefits to its members. The latest project is to provide a pension for the aged which likely will be carried out. The following circular on the subject was sent from headquarters to all local unions last week:

We again call attention to the necessity of making some provision for the old veterans who have stood the brunt of the battle when trades unions were comparatively in their infancy.

These pioneers in the movement, who labored hard for the welfare of the craft, are now reaching a condition of life when toil-hardened hands a hard task. They look upon the Cigarmakers' International union as the last harbor of refuge in their declining years. What they want and need is protection, and not charity. Hence the voluntary contributions and collections in the shops, have failed to relieve their growing distress.

By granting them a moderate amount as a pension monthly for the balance of their natural life, a worthy object can be attained without an additional large expense. For the purpose of enabling our members to discuss this matter more intelligently we submit a brief, though incomplete working plan. It explains itself:

1. Any member having contributed dues for a period of 30 years, commencing from the adoption of the general tariff on November 15, 1879, who shall have reached the age of 60 years, and is unable to earn $6 weekly, shall be entitled to a monthly pension of $6, under the following conditions:

2. All applicants for this benefit shall submit a full statement to the local unions for verification. If found correct, a copy of the same, signed by the officers, shall be submitted for approval to the executive board of the Cigarmakers' International union. A majority of the executive board shall have power to approve or reject the application; subject, however, to an appeal to a vote of the members. Any application disapproved shall not be submitted again to the executive board for the period of one year.

3. All recipients of pensions shall not be entitled to out-of-work and sick benefits.

4. Members who have contributed dues for 50 years and have reached the age of 65 years, shall be, under same conditions, as provided in section 1, entitled to $7 monthly; members who have contributed dues for 30 years and have reached the age of 70 years, shall be entitled to a monthly pension of $8; members who are over 80 years and have contributed dues for 30 years, shall be entitled to a monthly pension of $10.

5. Members while drawing pensions shall be exempt from the payment of local and international assessments.

6. No pension shall be granted to members who live in institutions which are wholly maintained by public funds.

A REMARKABLE SHOWING.

First Financial Statement of Plumbers Organization Under New System

The first financial statement of the United Association of Plumbers, Gas Fitters and Steam Fitters and Helpers of the United States and Canada has just been made public. It is the exhibit of one of the most remarkable records ever made by a labor organization in this country. The showing is for 12 months under a new system, and Secretary Tilden in his report makes the following statement:

"We had less than $5,000 on hand 18 months ago, and before the present system took effect neither sick, death nor strike benefits were paid by our international.

"We feel that every member should take an especial pride in this annual report for the reason that we started practically without any money 18 months ago, and for the year ending the last day of December, 1903, we paid $60,755 in benefits, paid the running expenses of local unions and the general office and furnished all necessary stationery, supplies and journals to locals without extra charge, and had $80,482.46 left over to our credit at the close of the year. We question whether any other international organization can boast of any better record.

"We not only accomplished more than we expected financially, but we added 101 unions to our list, with an increased membership of 2,455, and lost only one union on account of the new constitution, and that one was hardly large enough to be worth mentioning."

The following statistical report in the same connection is also of interest:

"The plumbers through their high dues system paid $186,375.55 in dues alone, against $8,000 formerly. With the accumulation of this fund the parent organization was enabled to pay $24,650 in sick benefits, $31,605 in strike and $4,500 in death benefits. Local unions were paid $29,827 for various purposes, and the international received only $26,825 from the locals, making it a good investment for the membership at large. The total receipts from all sources for the year were $307,724.20, and the expenditures for all purposes $227,241.74, leaving a balance of $80,482.46 on hand January 1, 1904. The number of members who paid dues for the year, excepting those traveling or suspended, was 17,944."

MAY MOVE HEADQUARTERS.

The American Labor Union Is Planning to Increase Its Membership.

Daniel McDonald, president of the American Labor union, was in Chicago last week making arrangements for moving the headquarters of the organization from Butte, Mont., to that city. The union is known as the socialistic rival of the American Federation of Labor and a leader in discussing the reason for the contemplated change in location said:

Probably the reason for the change of headquarters may be found in circulars which are now being sent throughout the country showing some of the methods being pursued in the west by the American Labor union. Some time ago the Bartenders' union in Butte withdrew from the A. L. U. and joined the various international organization of their craft. They claimed that they got no benefit from the socialist body, because it did not have jurisdiction beyond Butte. Then a local branch was formed of the dissatisfied members decided to stick with the A. L. U., and, although its laws require seven members to be entitled to a charter, the four men were granted a charter and the A. L. U. at once proceeded to boycott all saloons in Butte where the other union men were employed. The four members of the A. L. U. were organized by the Silver Bow Trades and Labor assembly of Butte, and the other organization, consisting of 150 men, were refused recognition.

The Bartenders' union started an agitation which resulted in the unions of butchers and musicians in Butte, the retail clerks in Great Falls, the bartenders in Anaconda, the plasterers and electricians in Butte and the retail clerks in Missoula all withdrawing from the American Labor union. In other words, the great rival of the American Federation of Labor has gone to pieces in its greatest stronghold, so that it may be looking for fresh fields to conquer. A central body under the American Federation of Labor is now doing business in Butte, with 17 affiliated unions.

Identified Alleged Assailants.

Robbed of $160 and beaten into insensibility, John Phillips, an oil well driller of No. 187 Cass avenue, Allegheny, recovered his senses early yesterday morning. While walking along Silver avenue he had been struck on the head and felled. An hour later James Kamp of East Robinson street and Joseph Martin of Voegtley street were arrested. Phillips identified them as his assailants and they were held in $1,000 each for court.

FIGHT IS STILL ON.

United Brewery Workers Refuse to Release Engineers and Firemen.

The long dispute between the International Union of United Brewery Workers and the International Union of Steam Engineers and the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, which was believed to have been satisfactorily adjusted, is still on. At the last meeting of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor an agreement was prepared which was favored by the officers of all organizations interested. Before it was signed the consent of the membership was necessary, and the agreement was submitted to a referendum vote of the United Brewery Workers. The vote was counted during the week, and of the 23,624 votes cast 19,417 were against the signing of the agreement.

At the Boston convention of the federation it was decided that the engineers and firemen should withdraw from the brewery workers' organization and affiliate with the organizations of their crafts. No attention was paid to the decision and the matter came up at the meeting of the executive council. A part of the agreement drawn up at that time, and which has been voted down, reads as follows:

"For the purpose of carrying into effect the decision above referred to, all engineers and firemen now members of the International Union of United Brewery Workmen of America, during the week of July 13-20 (inclusive), 1904, be given a clear transfer card by the respective secretaries of local unions belonging to the International Union of United Brewery Workmen of America; these cards to be accepted by local unions without discrimination, and the holders of these cards admitted to full membership into the local unions belonging to the International Union of Steam Engineers and the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen without the payment of any initiation fee or fine of any kind; and these newly admitted engineers and firemen shall immediately become entitled to all the rights, benefits and protection as all other members of said local engineers' and firemen's unions, provided, of course, that the regular dues or assessments shall be paid by all members of said local unions of engineers and firemen."

It is understood that the American Federation of Labor will cancel the charter held by the United Brewery Workers.

ATTACKING LABOR UNIONS.

One of the Plans Said to Have Been Adopted by Employers' Associations.

It has developed that the employers' associations and citizens' alliances formed during the year for the stated purpose of correcting abuses of labor unions, according to trade unionists, are now directing their efforts to attacking labor unions. Plans are being formed to put these alliances on a solid national basis and in a position to withstand the advance of the lockout. A national labor bureau has been formed in the west and has headquarters in a number of cities. Its purpose is understood by workingmen to be to promote a "black list" within the law.

The statement is made by one who says he is familiar with the operations of the bureau that a mechanic seeking employment in the metal industry in some of the western cities can no longer find it by applying at a shop. He must go to the local office of the labor bureau, and give his name, age, where last employed, and answer a lot of other questions. A general description of the applicant is taken by the man in charge of the office, and is filed away for future reference. The applicant is told to return again in a day or two. In the meantime his record is looked up and if he is given employment at all it is through a card with certain markings on it that he does not understand. The employer where he is sent to work understands the marking of the card, however, which in some cities is as follows:

1—Excellent workman.
2—Average workman.
3—Poor workman.
4—Interested in work; ambition.
5—Prompt; regular.
6—Talks too much with other workmen.
7—Drinks too much.
7—Union man.
8—Non-union man.
10—Good disposition.
11—Bad disposition.
12—Trouble-maker.

The man cannot get away from that record. It follows him around the country. If he has become known as an agitator in one city and has decided to reform, it will not help him any to go to another city. His record is there.

CONSUMED BY A FIRE THAT WATER WILL NOT QUENCH

Eczema drives its victim almost to the verge of distraction by its intolerable itching, stinging and burning. It seems to set the skin on fire, and the tormented sufferer rubs and scratches till the flesh is raw and the skin is torn and bleeds. Nothing applied externally does much good, for the disease is internal; the blood is aflame with acid poisons, that are forcing their way through the glands and pores of the skin, causing it to redden and swell and break out in splotches, pustules and pimples, from which a clear, yellow, watery matter exudes, hardens and dries, and then peels off in scales or fine particles like bran. Eczema kindles a fire that water will not quench, and that lotions, salves, powders and soap cannot smother. As warm weather comes on and the system is reacting and the blood making extra efforts to throw off the accumulated poisons, Eczema attacks with redoubled violence, and the sufferer is almost distracted by the fearful itching and burning. It is the most uncomfortable and aggravating of all skin eruptions and a terror in warm weather.

Local remedies give temporary ease, but as Eczema is not due to outside causes, but to a disordered condition of the system and an over-acid and impure blood, the treatment must be constitutional, or internal. Purify the blood and the skin disease will disappear. No better blood remedy can be found than S. S. S. It builds up the sour and acid blood, rids it of all impurities and poison, stimulates the sluggish organs, and invigorates and tones up the entire system; and as all skin eruptions like Eczema are only symptoms or signs of bad blood, they naturally disappear when that vital fluid is again restored to health.

S. S. S. is guaranteed strictly vegetable. It is not only a blood purifier, but a splendid tonic and appetizer, making it an ideal spring medicine. Treat Eczema through the blood, or you will never get permanently rid of it. Write for our book on the Skin and its Diseases, which is mailed free. Medical advice furnished without cost to you.

ECZEMA KEPT SPREADING.

Six years ago my wife had a breaking-out below her knees. At first red bumps appeared, but soon white, husky scabs came, and when these would shed off the place became red again, and would itch and burn so that she found it impossible to sleep. At times a yellow water ran from the bumps, and it kept getting worse and worse. Our family physician pronounced it Eczema, and prescribed ointments and powders; but it kept spreading, breaking out on her body and arms, and almost closed up her ears. The druggist Garner told me to try S. S. S., which she did, and after taking several bottles was cured, and is well to-day and has been for years.

Topics of the Week.

Uncle Sam deemed it time to ring down the curtain on Bandit Raisouli's comedy melodrama. Secretary Hay cabled our representatives at Tangier that they must immediately demand from the Moorish government either Perdicaris alive or Raisouli dead. The outlaw, growing bolder as his first demands for ransom and power were acceded to by the sultan of Morocco, increased those demands until, in addition to the $70,000 which he asked for the release of Perdicaris and Varley, his English companion, he also stipulated that he be made ruler of four provinces, and that the good faith of the sultan be guaranteed by Great Britain, America and France. It is this last demand that exhausted the patience of our government and brought the peremptory instructions to its representatives. The instructions further provided that the United States must not become involved in guarantee or otherwise with other nations. The sultan agreed to the bandit's latest terms, but Great Britain, in common with America, will have nothing to do with guaranteeing them. That our government's ultimatum has had speedy effect, however, is apparent from the news that the captives have been released. A Moorish dignitary, who was entrusted with power to act as intermediary, conveyed to Raisouli $20,000 in cash and a check for $50,000, besides a large body of prisoners from the bandit's tribe, who the latter had stipulated should be released.

The official account of the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war prepared for use in the Russian schools puts blame upon the United States. The circular sent out by the ministry of public instruction contrasts the benevolent methods employed by Russia towards native peoples with those of other nations, particularly the Americans. While other nations exploit colonization in the interest of capitalists Russia carries on colonization in the interest of the agricultural classes. Native customs are interfered with as little as possible, and kindly and fraternal relations are established under which the natives prosper. All tribes enjoy all the civil rights of Russians themselves and to their most conspicuous representatives the way is opened to the highest positions of state, while their families of high birth are received into the ranks of the Russian aristocracy. It must be owned that there is some basis for these claims, as Russia has undoubtedly been very successful in cultivating friendly relations with the aboriginal inhabitants of the regions she annexes. After extolling the colonial policy of Russia, the circular goes on to ascribe the war to the policy of England and the United States. "The plan is formed of expelling Russia from Manchuria in order that England and America may enjoy the fruits of the civilizing activity of Russia and take her place." Japan is being used as a catspaw with the idea "that the war would weaken both Russia and Japan and would render it easier for themselves (England and the United States) to further their own interests." Such are the ideas of the war which are being implanted in Russian school children. It may be noticed that it lays a basis upon which terms of peace between Russia and Japan could be negotiated without humiliation. The excuse is provided that by so doing England and the United States would be outwitted and their design of profiting by the exhaustion of the combatants would be foiled.

The international women's congress just held at Berlin was notable for several reasons. It showed that the new woman is gaining ground in many European countries, where her sex had long been in a subservient, almost servile, state; it showed that the American woman, as usual, is at the head of the movement to emancipate her sisters and to demand equal rights for both sexes the world over. Mrs. May Wright Sewall, the president of the International Council of Women for the past five years, is an Indianapolis woman, who has been prominent as an educator in this country. Other American women who had a leading part in the proceedings were Miss Susan B. Anthony, who is now 84; Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, whose books are the gospel of woman's rights; and Mrs. Anna Howard Shaw, one of the few women who prefix Rev. to their names. The international council now embraces 19 nationalities, with a total membership of eight of nine millions of women. When such a mighty army are clamoring for their rights, "mere man" should think twice before he ventures to remind them of their duties.

MRS. SEWALL.

The quiet announcement that Secretary Hay has ordered the titles on record books and seals of our embassies and consulates to be changed from "United States" to "American" has provoked much comment, practically all of a commendatory nature. There is, indeed, nothing iconoclastic about the change, for common usage long ago gave sanction to it. The term "United States" is applicable to many nations in the western hemisphere, but to all of them are attached distinctive geographical titles, and it is by these titles that each is respectively known. The United States of Venezuela is known simply as Venezuela, and the same is true of the United States respectively of Mexico, Brazil and Colombia. In choosing to designate this country then, by its more distinctive title, Secretary Hay is simply making use of a prerogative which other republics have long enjoyed. Moreover, as the terms "Mexican," "Venezuelan" and "Brazilian" have exclusively been used to designate the residents of these respective countries, so, as far back as the days of William Pitt the term "American" was used to designate the inhabitants of the thirteen colonies which afterwards became the United States of America. Secretary Hay gave evidence of his desire to make the change he has just effected when in London he had engraved upon his visiting cards, "The American Ambassador."

The retirement of Attorney General Knox and Secretary Cortelyou, of the department of commerce and labor, from the cabinet, created vacancies in the president's official family, which he has promptly filled. Secretary of the Navy William H. Moody becomes attorney general. The naval portfolio goes to Paul Morton of Illinois, second vice president of the Santa Fe railroad, and son of J. Sterling Morton, secretary of agriculture under President Cleveland. Victor H. Metcalf of California, is the new secretary of the department of commerce and labor. He is a native of New York, a graduate of the Yale law school, member of a prominent legal firm in Oakland, Cal., and a representative in congress, where he served on the ways and means committee. All of these men are warm, personal friends of the president. Mr. Morton has the reputation of being a great nimrod as well as a keen and successful business man, and his acquaintance with the president is said to date from the time of the latter's trip to the Yellowstone National park two years ago. Mr. Morton had charge of the presidential party and on the hunting excursion which followed, it is said, he won the president's admiration by his skill with the rifle. A deeper significance attaches to Mr. Morton's appointment, however, than that based upon ties of personal friendship. It is conceded that it is a substantial recognition of the gold Democrats, among whom Mr. Morton's father was a leader, and to which wing of the party the son belonged until quite recently when he renounced his other Democratic principles and announced his allegiance to the Republican party. Despite his confessed unfamiliarity with the affairs of the naval department, Mr. Morton brings to it business sagacity and a genius for administration that has long marked him out among his fellows in the railroad world. The president is convinced that the interests now intrusted to Mr. Morton will rest in safe hands and, judging from the signal success which has hitherto marked Mr. Roosevelt's appointments, the country may safely trust to his wisdom in this latest choice.

With the organization of its government and the signing of the canal treaty, Panama cut the third deep notch in its history this week when its currency commission established the finances of the new republic on a gold basis. By the terms of an agreement reached in conference with representatives of this country, Panama is to establish as a standard a coin equivalent in fineness and weight to the dollar of the United States. She will also make the United States dollar legal tender within her boundaries, will recoin her Columbian silver into coins the size of our silver dollar, and will coin more silver until a total of $6,000,000 is reached. Secretary of War Taft, on behalf of the canal commission, signed the agreement with the stipulation that the terms, so far as they affect the Panama canal, shall be enacted into law. For a short time the action of a few obstructionists in the new republic created the impression that it might reject the gold standard. The better minds of the country, however, quickly saw the folly of pursuing a course that had received the emphatic repudiation of its older neighbor and sponsor, no small share of whose present prosperity, it was recognized, is due to the sound financial basis upon which its great commercial enterprises rest with confidence.

With the Chicago convention out of the limelight, public attention is now turned with anticipation towards the gathering of the Democratic clans soon to be held in St. Louis. If anything were lacking to convince one that the forthcoming convention will not be devoid of spectacular features, it was set at rest this week by William Jennings Bryan, who traveled to New York from his Nebraska home to assist an Empire state faction in its meeting of protest against the candidacy of Judge Parker. The demonstration was an extraordinary one in that it was almost a bolting convention of Democrats, met to reject the claims of David B. Hill to leadership, and indirectly to repudiate his alleged candidate. Mr. Bryan there reiterated his implacable hostility to Judge Parker, whom he stigmatized as a cowardly candidate unworthy the support of manly Democrats. In his index expurgatorius Mr. Bryan also included the names of Olney and Cleveland, and made it plain that his stentorian voice would be lifted against them at any and all stages of the political game in St. Louis, where they might show their heads. It is rumored that Mr. Bryan, with his knowledge of psychological moments, acquired from his experience at the famous "cross of gold" convention in 1896, will await the striking of a similar hour at St. Louis and then, with the magic of his eloquence, will endeavor to stampede the convention for Gen. Miles. The Cleveland boom appears to be assuming definite proportions and to have progressed so far as to warrant the report that Bourke Cockran of New York is the man who will present the claims of the distinguished ex-president upon the floor of the convention. Meanwhile, Minnesota, Texas and Vermont have just held their conventions, and the results do not tend to clarify the situation. Texas instructed her delegation for Parker. Vermont, after voting down emphatically a resolution declaring for Parker, sends an uninstructed delegation. Minnesota, long claimed by the Hearst faction, gives him only one of her four delegates-at-large and an even break on the district delegates, but in her resolutions declares that Bryan is the noblest Democrat of them all. Missouri is the only state remaining to be heard from, but it is now as apparent as it was a week ago that Parker is a long way from going into the convention with votes enough to assure his nomination. It is evident that the field is open for an exciting political combat, the outcome of which no man can now safely predict.

This is a bad year for governors. Peabody has his hands full of trouble in Colorado. Yates has witnessed the overthrow of his second-term gubernatorial hopes in Illinois. La Follette and his "half-breed" faction, contending in Wisconsin for a third term and for enlarged state control over railroad corporations, were practically ousted from the Republican national convention by their opponents, known as the "stalwarts" and led by Senator Spooner and others. Gov. Cummins of Iowa, whose persistent advocacy of tariff revision has given to his pet measure the sobriquet of the "Iowa idea," has witnessed its rejection from the national platform of the Republican party. The divisions in the three states last named, however, will not affect their loyalty to the national ticket if the declarations of the defeated leaders are to be believed, although the Democrats assert that the exceeding bitterness engendered between the Wisconsin factions will result in putting that state in their column this fall.

Early estimates on the loss of life in the Gen. Slocum disaster were not exaggerated. This is from a total passenger list of 1,600, as nearly as can be estimated. The magnitude of the disaster has aroused public officials to make the most rigid investigations into its cause and responsibility. A coroner's inquest is now in progress; a Federal commission has been appointed to investigate under the direction of the department of commerce and labor; New York's board of harbor inspectors will conduct an independent investigation, and United States Attorney Bennett will lay before the department of justice the evidence brought to light by the coroner, with a view to having action taken by the federal grand jury. Enough facts have already been disclosed at the inquest to show that the Gen. Slocum was wretchedly prepared to meet such an emergency as that which sent her passengers to death. Hundreds of lives might have been saved had her owners and officers complied with the provisions for safety required by law. It has been established that her crew, instead of being a body of disciplined seamen, was largely composed of landsmen picked up hastily for the season's work; that a fire drill had never been held on the boat to the knowledge of these men; that the hose provided for extinguishing fire was of cheap and rotten material that burst in half a dozen places when the water was turned on; that the life preservers, which had been purchased in 1891, were also rotted, and when put on became water-logged weights to drag their victims down to death; that the government employee delegated to inspect these preservers had performed his work in a perfunctory and careless manner; that combustible materials, including barrels of oil, were stored on the lower deck; that no efforts were made by officers or crew to lower life-boats or rafts; and finally, that this raw and undisciplined body of men made no effort to save passengers, but fled at the approach of danger, in selfish endeavor to save only themselves. These facts, which apparently establish a case of criminal negligence, have been made the basis for personal damage suits against the Knickerbocker Steamboat Company—the owner of the Gen. Slocum—aggregating, it is said, more than $6,000,000. In this connection it is worth noting that from the bodies of the Slocum victims the authorities gathered money, valuables, savings bank books and negotiable paper to the amount of $200,000, showing the well-to-do character generally of the members of St. Mark's Lutheran parish, for whom the ill-fated excursion was given. Notwithstanding this, there is sufficient want among some of the stricken families to demand the creation of a relief fund and this has reached nearly $80,000, with President Roosevelt among the large contributors.

The rate war now in progress among the Atlantic steamship companies is causing the immigration department much worry and trouble. At the low rate of $10 a passage great numbers of immigrants, many of them of exceedingly undesirable character, are landing at Ellis island. In one shipload alone, it is said, 50 per cent of the women were classed as unfit to enter; this in comparison with a ratio of 3 per cent previously. The worst elements from London's population are said to be coming over. The fact that such immigrants as are rejected are detained and deported at the steamship companies' expense affords hope, however, that the rate war will soon end.

European military journals note with much interest that the war in the far east is following the same course it took before when Japan and China were the combatants. Japanese strategy is identically the same now that it was then, and more strangely still the Russian strategy repeats the blunders made by the Chinese. Not only does this similarity hold good of the general strategy of the campaign, but it also extends to particular details, engagements being fought upon the same battlefields, even the old entrenchments used by the Chinese being again utilized by the Russians. In 1904, as in 1894, the first objective of the Japanese was the enemy's fleet. Now as then the first movement of the land campaign was to occupy Ping-Yang, the position of greatest strategic importance in northern Korea. The crossing of the Yalu was effected in the same way as before, including the turning movement upon the enemy's left wing. The Russians were flanked and forced out of their position in just the same way as the Chinese had been. In 1894 the Japanese landed their second army at Pitsewo and found no Chinese there to offer resistance. They did precisely the same thing in this campaign and the surprising thing is that the Russians imitated the Chinese in this particular. One might almost conclude that the Russians deemed it incredible that the Japanese would dare to repeat against them the same strategy that they used with success against the Chinese. It may be that the subtle Japanese counted on just that view of the case. At any rate they made no change in the lines of their strategy, which were indeed so sound that they could hardly be improved in general character. Their energies were employed in improving their means of warfare and in these they have made enormous advances since the Chinese war.

Not only in the opening of their campaign, but also in its various phases has there been a close parallel with the campaign of 1894. The operations against Port Arthur were begun as before by a battle at Kinchau and the occupation of Dalny. The Russians were shut up in the peninsula just as the Chinese were before, but here the parallel fails. In 1894 the Japanese captured Port Arthur in a single day's fight, within 29 days after the landing at Pitsewo. It will require a more arduous campaign to wrest Port Arthur from the grip of the Russian bear. Meanwhile the general strategical position is unchanged. Now as then, the Japanese maintain a double objective, establishing several bases and executing wide reconnoissances so as to threaten Mukden in the north and Niuchwang at the south, keeping the Russians in suspense as to where the real attack will take place. Just the same strategy was employed against the Chinese, and the Russians seem to be quite as much embarrassed by it as were the Chinese generals. The actual course taken by the Russians is probably just what the Japanese desired. By offering battle on the extreme right of his line, Gen. Kuropatkin puts himself in a position upon which the Japanese can most rapidly converge their armies and sustain them most effectively, as his part of the field of war is nearest to their real base, the sea. At the same time it offers to Gen. Kuroki an opportunity of attacking the Russians upon their flank, which he is probably now seizing. It is known that his army has been strongly reinforced since it occupied Fung-Wang-Cheng, and that it is now moving forward. In this country commentators upon the course of the war have expressed surprise that the Japanese have not been more rapid in their movements against Kuropatkin's dangerously extended lines. It has been pointed out that by sufficient celerity of action the Russian army defeated at Telissu might have been cut off. European military critics credit the Japanese with much broader views. They hold that correct strategy is being employed in permitting the Russians to collect their forces as far to the south as possible, as that greatly simplifies the problem the Japanese have to solve, which is not to capture particular positions, but to defeat Kuropatkin's army and crush the Russian power in Manchuria.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL OKU.
Commander of the Second Japanese army, which has beaten the Russians at Kinchou and at Telissu.

The appointment of Field Marshal Oyama as commander-in-chief of the Japanese armies in Manchuria and his selection of Gen. Kodama as his chief of staff are regarded as indications of operations upon an enlarged scale. So far as the generalship shown by the commanders of the various Japanese armies in the field is concerned, there is every reason for satisfaction. They have all performed with signal success the duties assigned to them. Therefore, when Field Marshal Oyama relinquishes his duties on the general staff to take personal charge of operations in the field of war it implies that the various armies are now to be operated as parts of a great military net in which Gen. Kuropatkin's army may be caught and extinguished. Gen. Kuropatkin is credited with correct appreciation of Japanese plans, but he is handicapped by instructions from St. Petersburg, and accounts from various independent sources leave no doubt that there is great friction between him and Admiral Alexieff. It is the general belief among military critics upon the continent that if Gen. Kuropatkin had his own way he would have put Port Arthur in as good a state of preparation as possible and then fallen back into the interior with the rest of his forces, putting upon the Japanese the necessity of guarding long lines of communication, thus depleting their strength while he would be gaining in strength by the continual arrival of reinforcements. This prudent strategy is now no longer available. The situation at present is such that disaster more sweeping and complete than has yet befallen the Russians may now be impending.

An Optimistic View of Ireland.

Ireland has played the Niobe of Nations for so long that an article by Sir Gilbert Parker in the National Review will startle many people with the revelation that she is drying her tears. Sir Gilbert is reviewing a book by Sir Horace Plunkett, who some 15 years ago launched a movement of organized self-help, known as the Irish Agricultural Organization Society, which now has 800 branches and nearly half a million members. Sir Gilbert is a British Imperialist, Sir Horace is a Protestant and a Unionist; therefore we would expect a cheerful optimism from both. But their position recognizes fully the wrongs and grievances of Ireland, the gigantic task of regeneration, the many obstacles of sectarian and factional prejudice which obstruct progress. They recognize also that the Wyndham Land Bill of 1903 has not solved the Irish question; but they declare with one voice that the solution of this question began with Parnell's death, when one-man power ceased to be supreme, and that the true solution lies in bringing together Protestant and Catholic, Home Ruler and Unionist, North and South, town and country, upon a common basis—all are Irishmen. The problems of Ireland, they hold, can be solved only by Irishmen in Ireland.

This has a plausible ring, like most political panaceas, but Sir Horace Plunkett is no mere theorist with pacific intentions. He admits his hearty sympathy with the doctrine that "a wrong inflicted upon a community entitles those who inherit the consequences of the injury to claim reparation at the hands of those who inherit the government." At the same time he paradoxically believes that "Anglo-Irish history is for Englishmen to remember, for Irishmen to forget." This happy state of affairs he believes to be coming about, and Sir Gilbert finds consolation in the thought that

We have probably made a nearer approach towards understanding the Irish than have the Germans in Austria towards understanding the Czechs or the Germans in Germany towards realizing the Poles. More it would be quixotic to expect, and it is indeed unlikely that the British attitude towards Ireland will ever be greatly bettered. That attitude is now mellow and free from bitterness; there is an obviously anxious desire to "do the right thing," a willingness to listen and to learn, a friendly effort to be tactful. Some of our demonstrations may, however, remind an unfriendly spectator of the elephant who "wreath'd his lithe proboscis" to make sport for Adam and Eve. Nevertheless they are the best of which we are capable, and the spirit behind is excellent. But though the gulf between the English and Irish mind must always, in my opinion, be difficult to bridge, and though the attitude of England towards Ireland will always be an important factor in their relationship, its dominating and unhealthy importance will diminish in proportion as the new movement of Irish regeneration from within succeeds.

Sir Horace thinks he has found the vital impulse of agricultural union for self-help. Agriculture is, and always has been, the mainstay of the Irish people. The decay of agriculture, owing to the iniquitous land tenure system, wrought more havoc than Cromwell's Ironsides or political proscription or religious persecutions. The revival of agriculture would mean the renaissance of Ireland, and this is now made possible by the new land act. Sir Horace Plunkett's organization with its half-million of members has spread co-operative creameries, dairies, poultry societies, agricultural banks and home industry societies all over the island; has inculcated thrift, responsibility and business-like habits; is founding libraries, reviving the rural arts and handicrafts, and bringing back to the countryside some of the old Irish joyousness. Such an organization, actively engaged in such work, cannot but mitigate the asperities of opposing creed and faction, and if it promotes prosperity it will probably bring peace. Only hungry people quarrel. There is a deep political wisdom in Caesar's reference to Cassius: "Let me have men about me that are fat."

Sir Horace does not believe, however, that Ireland can be saved by agriculture alone. The solution of the rural problem, he holds, involves not merely co-operation, resettlement and state intervention, but also the further development of manufactures in the towns, and particularly of the industries and handicrafts subsidiary to agriculture. This broad view relieves his remedy of much visionary or utopistic coloring. Surely no one can object to a plan which proposes to teach the Irish to forget by heaping benefits upon them. The plan will be a good thing in itself, even if it fails to serve its Lethean purpose. It may be doubted, however, whether any measure of prosperity which will awaken and stimulate national feeling can reconcile the Irish to political dependence. Nationality is the dream of patriotic Irishmen everywhere, and it is a dream that they will ever pursue.

Who Shall Be Judge?

Prof. Francis Galton of London proposes a new system for the advancement of the human race. He would call it "Eugenics," which being translated liberally means something like "good living." As elaborated by the professor it consists in selecting the best specimens of the human race as models and trying to bring the race up to that standard. Very well, you may say. Very well, indeed, if it can be accomplished. But there are difficulties in the way of every good thing. First in the way of this proposition is the question of who shall be judge of the best in human nature. There are so many different standards that agreement may be more difficult than the breeding of a better race. There are those who put success above everything, but what is success? Is it the gathering of wisdom, as recommended by King Solomon, or is it the gathering of wealth, as exemplified by the modern "captains of industry"?

Prof. Henry G. Wells, the writer of "scientific fiction," takes the liberty to differ from Prof. Galton in the manner of procedure. He declares the way to better things is to sterilize the bad, rather than to encourage the good. There we are again. We must have a judge to decide what is bad, so we may sterilize it and thus get rid of it. There again we shall encounter the different standards and the conflict of opinion. There is no one in authority to lay down the law. It is like the ever-recurring spartan proposition to put the incurably insane to a painless death. It is like the idea of preventing the marriage of the criminally disposed. A good thing in theory, but an impossible thing in practice. No one has reached the pre-eminence essential to convince the mass that he can unerringly say which are the sheep and which the goats.

Charles Darwin made a great discovery after many years of patient effort. Upon his discovery all the later schemes for the improvement of the human race are based. But they overlook the vital feature of that discovery. Mr. Darwin pointed out that through the ages there has been a "survival of the fittest." In obedience to a great universal law above the control of human kind the species developed. Improvement was ever the order of the day. Reversions there were, no doubt, but the general trend has been upward. While it is given to man to strive for uninterrupted advancement, yet it does not follow that it is his province to try to stop the operations of the primal laws of nature. It is not given to him to say what is best for the ages. At best his vision is limited. The span of history is comparatively short. It may prove a guide as to what is best for society for the present, and upon that man may base his laws. But the finite mind may not comprehend the larger designs of the universe, or determine what will be best for centuries to come.

Prof. Galton's plan suggests difficulty enough, but Prof. Wells plunges into still deeper water. Evil has ever been the chief stimulus in the battle for better things. If it were possible to eliminate all evil from the world who shall say that it would promote the grand scheme of things for the future? Overcoming the dangers of the wilderness has given the world the virtues and the strength of the pioneers. Overcoming difficulties has ever given strength to human character. It is a human duty to look upward and to strive for improvement, each according to his lights. Much good has been accomplished by this constant striving, though men have never agreed exactly on what constitutes the highest good. They probably never will. They can hardly reach such perfect agreement, at any rate, as to cause them to consent to the destruction of themselves and their dear ones for the supposed advantage of society at large.

Ethics and eugenics are all right in their place. They may be forces for the regeneration of man. Yet we may rightfully enter a protest against any attempt to make them compulsory. The protection of life and property are by common consent assigned to government. To secure these benefits government may even take life. But short of absolute necessity for the continuance of society compulsory measures had better not be employed. The largest possible personal liberty will tend to the development of higher types, and the care of the derelicts will assist in developing the finest attributes of humanity. "Faith, hope and charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity."

Echoes of the National Convention.

A NATIONAL convention affords a striking illustration of the truth of Madison's aphorism that "in all legislative assemblies the greater the number composing them the fewer will be the men who in fact direct the proceedings." The national convention is the supreme legislative assembly of the party. The body which met this week was composed of 994 delegates, but the men who guided its action numbered hardly a dozen. Their opportunity was derived from party trusteeship, confided to their judgment subject to party responsibility, but control of motion by individual grasp of the helm was very marked. Agitation over the selection of the chairman of the national committee received its quietus as soon as Treasurer Bliss appeared upon the scene. Senator Lodge, representing the views of the administration upon that important subject, was manifestly the controlling personality in decisions upon platform utterances. Inside of the whirl and excitement attending the discussions of nearly a thousand men was a quiet center of calm deliberation where a few party leaders planned the course of action. The situation was not the product of the state of unanimity which existed as regards the presidential nomination, but is a typical characteristic, equally true of conventions which are the scene of contest. In such cases the storm center falls within a limited circuit of leadership and reflects the conflicts of purpose going on there. Agreement among the party leaders made the convention this week impressive by its harmony, while dissensions among the leaders and the operation of cross purposes are likely to make the Democratic national convention at St. Louis a scene of wild commotion. Nevertheless, actual direction of the proceedings will be in the hands of comparatively a few men.

The great topic of after-convention discussion is the tariff plank of the platform. Its meaning was the subject of warm controversy as soon as it was promulgated. A curious illustration of the diversity of interpretation of which it is susceptible is the fact that one Chicago paper headlined it in its news columns as a declaration in favor of tariff revision, while on the editorial page the opinion was expressed that it was really a stand pat deliverance. It is a fact that energetic claims are being made from these contrary points of view, so that if one were to judge from the mere fact of controversy as to the meaning one might conclude that the deliverance was purposely designed to have a double meaning. The fact that all attempts to induce the resolutions committee to declare for a speedy or immediate revision were overwhelmingly defeated, justify the standpatters in their claim of victory. Here are the essential paragraphs of the tariff plank, the language of which deserves careful study:

"We insist upon the maintenance of the principles of protection and, therefore, rates of duty should be readjusted only when conditions have so changed that the public interest demands their alteration, but this work cannot safely be committed to any other hands than those of the Republican party.

"We have extended widely our foreign markets, and we believe in the adoption of all practicable methods for their further extension, including commercial reciprocity wherever reciprocal arrangements can be effected consistent with the principles of protection, and without injury to American agriculture, American labor or American industry."

It will be seen that there is no promise of revision, but at the same time the right is reserved to readjust the tariff schedules should occasion arise. President Butler, of Columbia University, neatly summarized the utterance as a conservative declaration of a progressive policy. An attempt is being made to inject into the plank more meaning than it will sustain, and one newspaper here is already predicting that President Roosevelt's first message after the election will propose tariff revision. The assertion is made with an amount of circumstance and emphasis which has attracted some attention. From inquiry among delegates in the administration circle, I gather that the facts of the case are about as follows:

There is no desire to urge tariff revision and it was held that any platform suggestion of the kind would be extremely unwise. The inevitable effect of any promise of tariff revision would be to check imports, diminish revenue, disturb business and add immensely to the unavoidable strain and anxiety of the electoral campaign. At the same time well-informed statesmen foresee the great possibility that tariff readjustments may become necessary in the interest of the protective system, to guard our national interests against injury from fiscal changes impending in other nations. Various nations have tariff changes in contemplation largely aimed against American commerce, and which will call for countervailing action by this country. At the very time the convention was in session the Canadian papers were discussing the recent budget statement of Mr. Fielding, the Dominion Minister of Finance, which suggested that "where a country was markedly hostile in trade matters to Canada, a maximum tariff should be applied, while friendly countries should receive the benefit of a minimum tariff." No doubt is entertained that the United States is classed among the "hostile" countries, and when the threat is carried into effect this country should be in a position to reply to it. Tariff readjustment thus inspired would be quite likely to take the shape of increase of duties in some schedules. It is pretty safe to say that the next tariff bill will embrace maximum and minimum schedules. The House will not again consign reciprocity to the tender mercies of the Senate, and provision for commercial reciprocity will be made by arranging a minimum schedule for friendly nations, while those whose tariffs are designed to make a special attack upon American interests will bump up against the maximum schedule. But whatever readjustments may be made the duties will be protective and the actual result may be more an advance of duties than a lowering of them. The belief that this readjustment is likely to come during the next presidential term is probably well founded, but the basis of this opinion is the plain drift of events, and not the existence of any intention to precipitate a struggle over tariff legislation. All party leaders of real weight and influence dread the necessity of undertaking the task, but they recognize the possibility that it may present itself, and so the tariff plank admits that rates of duty may be readjusted "when conditions have so changed that the public interests demand their alteration."

The platform as a whole, while it conforms to President Roosevelt's suggestion that it should be incisive and decisive, concise and precise, illustrates the tendency of such documents to grow in length. No matter how concise the language may be, when a document is at once a summary of party achievement, a criticism of opposing principles, an expression of party sentiment upon the topics of the times, and a declaration of party purpose, it can not well be brief. At the same time, it is curt and oracular, considered as a program of party action, and the portions which really indicate the legislative program are not clearly distinguished from the rest. All these things enhance the importance of the candidate's letter of acceptance. Mr. Blaine long ago pointed out this tendency. He said: "Formerly the platform was of first importance. Diligent attention was given, not only to every position advanced, but to the phrase in which it was expressed. The presidential candidate was held closely to the text, and he made no excursions beyond it. Now, the position of the candidate, as defined by himself, is of far more weight with the voters, and the letter of acceptance has come to be the legitimate creed of the party."

In this campaign, circumstances will give unusual weight to the letters of the candidates on both sides. President Roosevelt's letter will be looked to for an authoritative construction of the tariff plank and for hints as to legislative purpose, while the Democratic nominee will be expected to let the people know what are now the true principles of the Democratic party.

Convention scenes have been so fully described that there is no occasion for any further reference to them, but the splendid appearance of capability presented by the delegates seen in the mass deserves remark. That serried array contained the elite of the party, and, looking over the expanse of faces, presenting every type of physiognomy, one could not but be struck by their common attribute of energy. Probably no event in the world calls together in one body so many men of active affairs as the national convention of one of the great parties which rule the United States. One sees men from every walk of life, differing greatly in position and attainments, but they are all men who have gone to the front in their sphere of action, and their look and mien bear the stamp of superiority. A nation which welds together so vast an array of individual ability into an efficient instrument of government, and which evokes system and order from such a mass of such diverse composition, has just claim to be regarded as having reached the highest pitch of constitutional morality yet attained by the human race.

The Quiet Observer.

By Erasmus Wilson.

IF WE were able to get the fact well settled in our minds that the Universal Cause acts by general laws, and not by special, we would find much less trouble in accounting for many things that puzzle us greatly.

It would not be very difficult to get this great fact well before the people were it not that they have so long been taught that God deals with the individual directly. In other words, He blesses or punishes each individual personally, meting out to each that which is due.

This teaching naturally leads people to regard any serious mishap, untimely death or failure to achieve success as an evidence of God's displeasure. And it has not been long since it was taught that these visitations were punishments for sins, although the sufferers were not aware of having committed any sin worthy of special punishment.

This naturally gave rise to the question why a good man should be made to suffer while his wicked neighbor prospered in whatever he might undertake.

The usual answer to this question was that the ways of God are past finding out.

While it is true that the ways of God are past finding out, it is also true that such answers do not answer the question at all, and are not even satisfactory to those who blindly believe what they are taught.

And yet a great many good people, and intelligent people, try to believe it, and are in a measure satisfied until something befalls them. Then it is they want to know why they should have been thus scourged. That they should not feel kindly towards God for this is most natural, although they may say with their lips that it was just and merciful.

That this has weakened the faith of many in God there can be no doubt. The doctrine of foreordination, as taught some years ago, had a like effect, but theologians fixed it up so that it agreed fairly well with common sense. Now that it has been abandoned it is probable that its twin stumbling block will be eliminated from religious creeds and confessions.

According to these doctrines God is no more than a petty ruler, who rewards His individual subjects accordingly as He feels kindly or unkindly towards them, and that without allowing them to offer pleas or excuses. This could hardly be accepted by a free and independent people.

The recent steamboat disaster at New York brought this question up squarely and boldly before the people, but in a more perplexing form than when the Iroquois theater was burned, for some people thought that calamity was a sign of God's disapproval of theaters. The time was when this would have been the general verdict, but only a very few preachers, and fewer writers, ventured to suggest this as a probable reason for the calamity.

But the steamboat disaster, with double the number of casualties, will not admit of a like explanation, since those lost belonged to the membership and Sunday school of a notably pious and orthodox church.

So boldly did this question obtrude itself that many preachers felt that they must at least make an attempt to square it with the doctrines held by their particular denominations. Some of these were very lame attempts, while others were simply ridiculous—so ridiculous that one can hardly conceive of them being made seriously and in earnest.

It is very gratifying, however, to see that nearly all of the religious papers discussed it quite freely, and as far as known, not one blamed it on God, nor even intimated that it was in the nature of a judgment sent on that particular pastor and his flock, or on that particular denomination.

The Presbyterian Banner, which is generally regarded as a thoroughly orthodox organ, speaks of it in no uncertain tones. From its editorial, entitled "Faith or Fate," the following paragraphs are taken:

"The awful scenes there enacted have driven to distraction or into actual insanity men and women who witnessed them; how must such scenes affect a powerful and pitiful God? Could He not have averted it? May we still believe in Him, or must we be driven from our faith into the view that the world is a blind and pitiless machine? Faith or fate—to which shall we hold?

"Nothing new can be said on this world-old question, but after we recover from the first bewildering shock we begin to see that the old answers still suffice. For one thing, if we try to give up our faith and resort to fate we find no new solution for our trouble, but only find new troubles. There is no explanation and no comfort in fate, and all the burden of horror still remains upon us, aggravated by its irrationality. We can hope for relief only in finding some light upon the tragedy in a degree justifying it, and finding that there is no such light only deepens its darkness into hopeless night. And if we believe in blind fate, then all the signs and manifestations of intelligence and providence in the world and all the reasons for our faith become inexplicable enigmas, and the web of existence becomes more confused and painful than ever.

"By these awful results God is enforcing upon men the fact that this is a world of law in which we can live happily only in the path of obedience. These disasters are sharp discipline in the education of the race, and on them men rise to exacter knowledge and greater faithfulness. The education is costly in the blood and tears of men, but it slowly forges and fashions a better race. Such results, however, do not in the least excuse those who are guilty of fault in connection with such disasters, and they should have the blame fixed on them and be punished.

"There is small comfort in this view for the innocent victims of such events. They may be wholly innocent of any blame, and yet they are involved in all its dreadful consequences, while the guilty person or persons may escape. Here we can only fall back upon our faith that the Judge of all the earth is doing right and that God is working out some better thing than we know."

Life at Skibo Castle.

In the latest issue of the Independent there is an article upon "Mr. Andrew Carnegie at Skibo," said to have been written by a well-known British publicist and a personal friend of Mr. Carnegie. The article says:

Every morning at 8 o'clock a piper marches round the castle and in the evening plays through the dinner hour. His reveille lasts till 20 minutes past 8. Punctually at that moment he re-enters the castle; punctually at that moment the organist sits down to the organ in the hall; and guests who have risen to the wild skirling of the piper descend to breakfast with the salutation of the organ in their ears. * * * There is no lingering over the walnuts and the wine at Skibo, and one of the pastimes of the older guests is to watch a novice lighting his cigar while strolling round the grounds with Mr. Carnegie. He does not do it twice. I do not mean to imply that Mr. Carnegie says anything, but the smoker gradually becomes aware of an anti-nicotine atmosphere, and, being naturally anxious to respect his host's whims, retires to the smoking room when he wishes to light up. In another way, too, the laird of Skibo is carefully deferred to. He likes to lay down the law, and people let him. When they disagree they do it in silence, under the impression—whether right or wrong I do not know—that Mr. Carnegie does not care to be contradicted or argued with.

Japanese and Russians.

Some Japanese naval officers were sent to England to watch the building of a Japanese ship there and bring her home. A Russian ship had just been completed there. Russian officers had been stationed at the yard for months to study the construction of their ship. They were big, splendid, careless chaps, and the time they devoted to the dock yard depended on their other engagements. They took some experts with them to show them the ropes when their ship sailed away.

Then came Kamimura and his fellow officers. For months they haunted the dock yard where their ship was on the ways. There came invitations a-plenty, but these Japanese officers sent regrets. When the work was finished on their ship they took possession and no foreigner has been aboard of her since, except by invitation.—From Leslie's Monthly Magazine for July.

Musical Notes.

Commencement week has been celebrated since Monday last at the Pittsburgh Conservatory of music in Dithridge street, with a number of social entertainments and with 11 concerts given by teachers and pupils—mainly pupils—in the various departments. The programs were admirably adapted to display the careful training afforded by the conservatory curriculum, and throughout the week there were large audiences. Perhaps the chief event was the piano recital given Thursday evening by Miss Kate Kurtz, one of the most gifted members of the faculty, who has been highly praised by Harold Bauer and whose program on this occasion was taken entirely from the works of Chopin. On Friday evening a reception was given by Mr. Webster and the members of the faculty to the pupils of the conservatory and their friends. This pleasant occasion ended the most successful year in the conservatory's history. The scholarship honors this year were awarded to Misses Camille Maher, Lulu Keiser, Achsa Ellis, Flora Kampman, Helen Potts, Mary Milligan, Dora Engstrom, Jean Chester, Florence Eckstein, Georgia Wise, Jennie Evans, Edith MacFarlane and Gertrude Brehm. The undergraduate partial scholarships were received by Misses Henrietta Schmeltz, Josephine Maloney, Emma Foltz, Fallie McKinley, Frances Casey, Lena Raper, Gladys Fleming and Mary Hukill.

"Parsifal" is to be presented in English next season by the Savage Opera Company. The principals of the cast have already been engaged. Madame Kirkby-Lunn, the English contralto who appeared in Pittsburgh with the orchestra during the season of 1903-04, will sing the role of Kundry. As alternate with Madame Kirkby-Lunn will be Hanna Mara, leading dramatic soprano at Breslau. Alis Pennanini and Frederick De Voss will alternate in singing "Parsifal." Amfortas will be sung by Johannes Bischoff, for five years leading baritone at Cologne. An American basso, Putnam Griswold, of Oakland, California, will sing Gurnemanz. The conductors will be Walter Rothwell and Moritz Grimm. Mr. Savage expects to give the opera one of the most beautiful and elaborate settings which he has ever attempted.

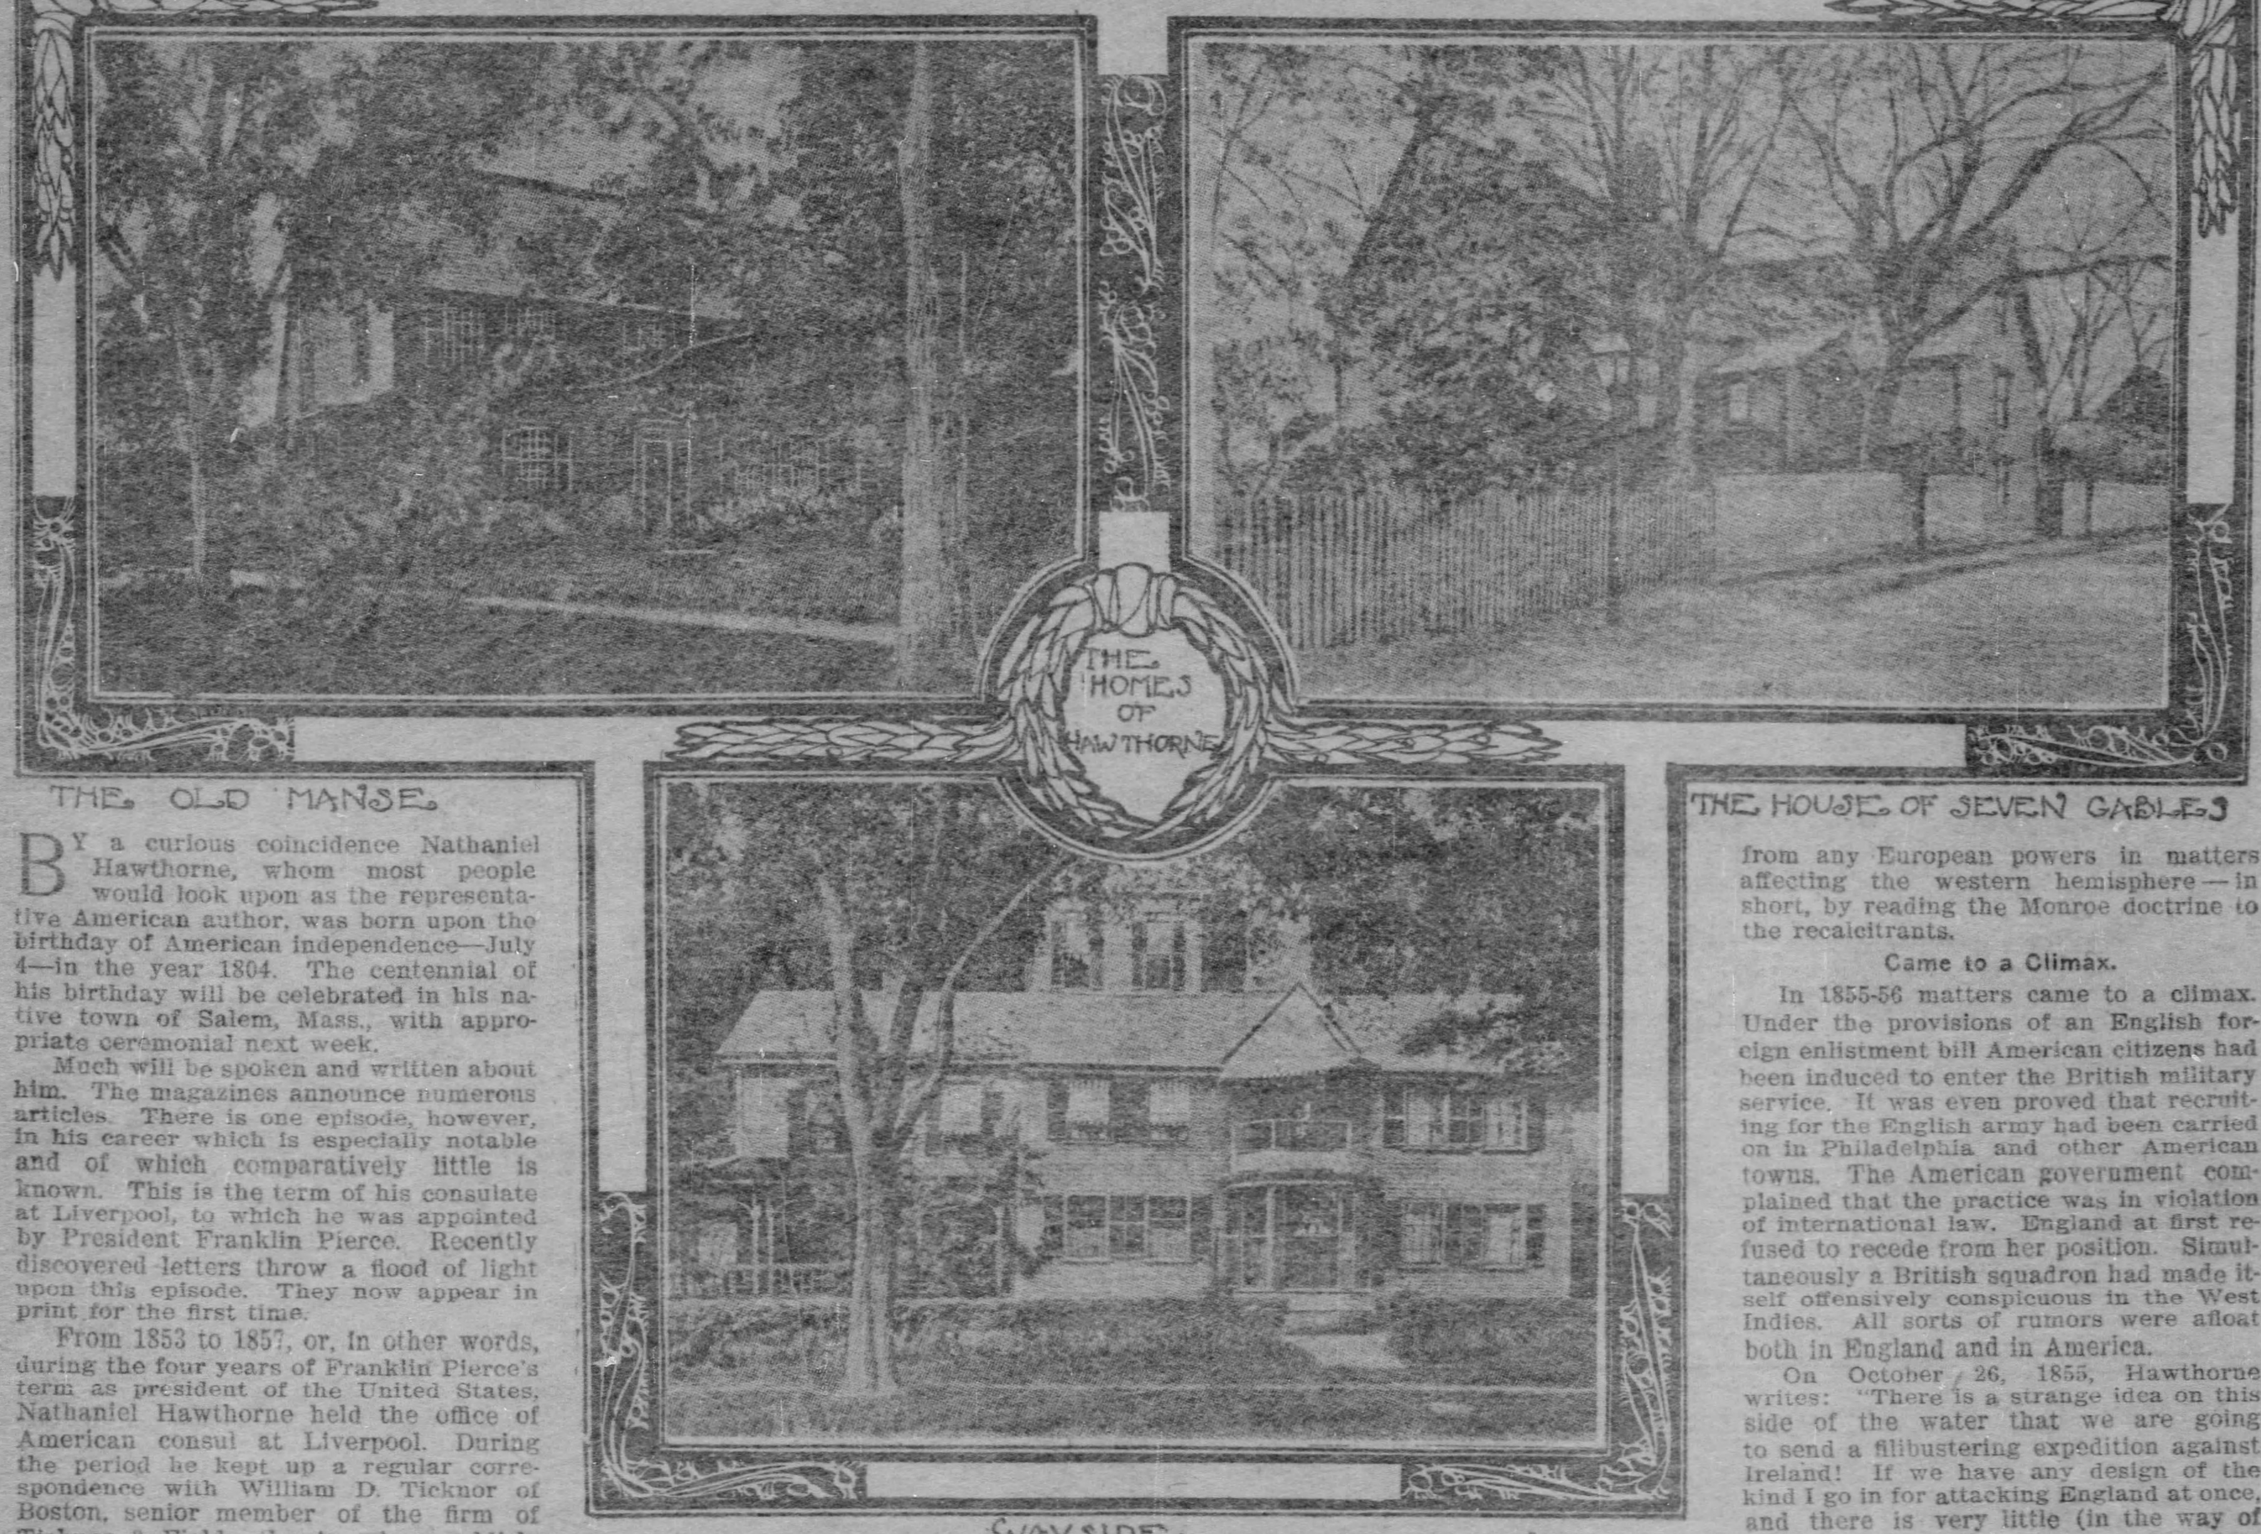
The new organ built by the Hilgren-Lane company for the Methodist church at Carrolton, O., will be opened by Edward J. Napier on Tuesday evening. He will be assisted by Miss Alice Archer, reader.

The Centenary of Hawthorne's Birth

THE OLD MANSE.



THE HOUSE OF SEVEN GABLES.

THE HOMES OF HAWTHORNE.

SWAYSIDE.

BY a curious coincidence Nathaniel Hawthorne, whom most people would look upon as the representative American author, was born upon the birthday of American independence—July 4—in the year 1804. The centennial of his birthday will be celebrated in his native town of Salem, Mass., with appropriate ceremonial next week.

Much will be spoken and written about him. The magazines announce numerous articles. There is one episode, however, in his career which is especially notable and of which comparatively little is known. This is the term of his consulate at Liverpool, to which he was appointed by President Franklin Pierce. Recently discovered letters throw a flood of light upon this episode. They now appear in print for the first time.

From 1853 to 1857, or, in other words, during the four years of Franklin Pierce's term as president of the United States, Nathaniel Hawthorne held the office of American consul at Liverpool. During the period he kept up a regular correspondence with William D. Ticknor of Boston, senior member of the firm of Ticknor & Fields, the American publishers of Nathaniel Hawthorne's works.

Both William D. Ticknor and James T. Fields were more to Hawthorne than mere publishers and business agents. They were personal friends. With Ticknor his relations were especially close. "Of Ticknor," writes Julian Hawthorne, "it might be enough to say that he was one of Hawthorne's most intimate and trusted friends, and that he fully deserved to be. He was an energetic and straightforward man of business, sound and sober in judgment, sagacious in the conduct of affairs. On the personal and social sides he was genial, cheerful, companionable and charming. His voice and face announced his transparent honesty. From being Hawthorne's publisher he insensibly came to occupy the post of his business adviser and agent, and it was he to whom was intrusted the investment of the funds which Hawthorne collected from abroad. Once or twice he visited England, and was the author's guest there. Only a month or two before Hawthorne's death Ticknor accompanied him on a trip to Philadelphia and New York, and his own abrupt death in New York during his visit was a great shock to his friend, and hastened the latter's death."

Ticknor as he received these missives appears to have carefully filed them and laid them away, and for 40 years and more they have lain almost undisturbed in the box in which he placed them.

Sent to Julian Hawthorne.

A few months ago they were taken out by their present owner, Howard Ticknor, a son of the publisher, and communicated to Julian Hawthorne. Selections from a few of these letters, dealing mainly with the literary side of the elder Hawthorne's residence in England and in Continental Europe, have recently appeared in print. But this further selection, which reveals the humors, the trials and the tribulations of the Liverpool consulate during Hawthorne's term, is here published for the first time—with the sanction of Julian Hawthorne.

Hawthorne and Franklin Pierce had been close friends from the time they had been schoolmates together at Bowdoin college. When Pierce was nominated for the presidency Hawthorne wrote the official campaign biography. "He knew," said Mrs. Nathaniel Hawthorne, in a letter to her mother, "that it would subject him to abuse and that the lowest motives would be ascribed to him, but, provided his conscience is clear, he never cares a sou what people say. He knew he should never ask for an office, and not one word on the subject has ever passed between Gen. Pierce and Mr. Hawthorne."

When, after the election of Pierce, the new president offered his biographer the consulate at Liverpool the latter hesitated.

In the end, however, he consented. His nomination was confirmed on March 26, 1853, and he sailed for Liverpool in the latter part of the ensuing June. Mr. Ticknor was his fellow traveler on the steamer, but after a brief stay in Liverpool he went on to London.

The first of these letters, dated July 22, 1853, is addressed to Ticknor at London. Hawthorne confesses that "we have had very dull times here since you left us, and to tell the truth we are all very homesick. Mrs. Blodgett (the boarding house keeper with whom the Hawthornes were to spend their first weeks in Liverpool) cannot receive us till next Wednesday. The children find the hotel a veritable prison."

Found Little Enjoyment.

A week later he complains "I have found very little enjoyment thus far in my visit to England." He fears very much whether Mrs. Hawthorne will be able to bear "this abominable climate." He adds, however, that, abominable as it is, it suits him, "and I have never felt better in my life than since we landed."

He alludes humorously to the fact that he has already been called upon for oratorical efforts.

"On two occasions already I have mumbled forth some damned nonsense and shall have to mumble some more next Friday, when I dine with the mayor. However, it is one comfort that I cannot cut a much more foolish figure than the Englishmen themselves, for the tongue of man never uttered worse speeches than theirs are. For my part I charge myself pretty high with champagne and port before I get upon my legs, and whether the business is to make a speech or to be hanged I come up to it like a man—and I had as lief it should be one as the other."

Those were the days when it behooved an American representative abroad to be careful of what he said and did. England looked upon us with distrust and disfavor. Both she and France feared in the recent recurrence of American filibustering expeditions to Cuba a purpose on our part to secure Cuba and the West Indies. They had just joined in a manifesto asking the United States government "to decline now and forever hereafter all intention to obtain possession of the island of Cuba and to discountenance all such attempts in that direction on the part of any individual or power whatever."

America had answered by refusing to accept dictation from any European powers in matters affecting the western hemisphere—in short, by reading the Monroe doctrine to the recalcitrants.

BIRTHPLACE OF NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE,

The Room in Which Hawthorne Was Born Is That Above the One on the Left of the Front Door.

Came to a Climax.

In 1855-56 matters came to a climax. Under the provisions of an English foreign enlistment bill American citizens had been induced to enter the British military service. It was even proved that recruiting for the English army had been carried on in Philadelphia and other American towns. The American government complained that the practice was in violation of international law. England at first refused to recede from her position. Simultaneously a British squadron had made itself offensively conspicuous in the West Indies. All sorts of rumors were afloat both in England and in America.

On October 26, 1855, Hawthorne writes: "There is a strange idea on this side of the water that we are going to send a filibustering expedition against Ireland! If we have any design of the kind I go in for attacking England at once, and there is very little (in the way of fortification) to hinder an American fleet from sailing up the Mersey. I should like very well to be superseded in my consular duties by the arrival of a Yankee commodore or general. The truth is, I love England so much that I want to annex it, and it is by no means beyond the scope of possibility that we may do so, though hardly in my time."

Yet on November 9, he declares that he hates England. "We have all been in commotion here for a fortnight past," he says, "in expectation of war, but the peaceful tenor of the last accounts from America has gone far toward quieting us. No man would be justified in wishing for war, but I trust America will not bate one inch of honor for the sake of avoiding it, and if it does come we have the fate of England in our hands. If the Yankees were half so patriotic at home as we on this side of the water, I rather think we should be in for it. I hate England, though I love some Englishmen, and like them generally, in fact. * * * I shall wait with much interest for the response of Young America to the hostile demonstrations on the part of England. If I mistake not, John Bull is now heartily afraid of the consequences of what he has done, and will gladly seize any decent method of getting out of the scrape. If we do not fight him now I doubt whether he will ever give us another chance. He has partly learned what he himself is, and begins to have some idea of what we are. There has been a great change on both these points since I first came to England."

Matters, however, went from bad to worse, and on February 15, 1856, we find Hawthorne writing: "What do you think of the prospect of war? I don't exactly see how it is to be avoided, for, I can assure you, John Bull feels as if he could hit us a knockdown blow now that he is fully armed and we quite unprepared. The tone of the people here has been considerably changed by the probabilities of peace with Russia. Nevertheless, I will disown Frank Pierce if he backs out one inch, but I am sure he never will, and I would rather see America sink—in which case I will come back and sink with her—than have her give up her just rights. But there is no danger of our sinking."

"Frank" Pierce did not back down. On the contrary, he sent a decidedly warlike message to congress which increased the excitement.

"Fields writes me," this is a passage from a letter dated April 11, 1856, "that in case of a war between America and England he is going to fight for the latter. I hope he will live to be tarred and feathered, and that I may live to pour the first ladleful of tar on the top of his head, and to clap the first handful of feathers on the same spot. He is a traitor, and his English friends know it, for they all speak of him as one of themselves."

Yet with all his patriotism Hawthorne only a week later acknowledges that the longer he stays away from America the less he feels inclined to go back.

"If it were not for my children I question whether I should ever see America again. Not but what I love my country, but I can live more to my individual satisfaction elsewhere. I am happy to say that Julian does not share my feelings at all. He got a black eye the other day fighting with some English boys, who, he says, abused his country; but I believe the quarrel began by his telling them that it was his highest ambition to kill an Englishman."

On June 6, 1856, Hawthorne reports: "Our relations with England seem to me to bear a more pacific aspect than for many months past. Frank Pierce never did a better thing than in recognizing Walker's government; it has brought John Bull to his bearings, and, with his customary growling and grumbling, he is going to back out."

Which, indeed, he did. John practically conceded the points at issue, put a stop to the enlistment of American citizens and tendered an apology to the United States. "We have gained a great triumph over England," is Hawthorne's comment, "and I begin to like her better now, for, I can assure you, Englishmen feel that they have given up forever the pretensions to superiority and the haughty tone which they have hitherto held toward us. We have gone through a crisis and come out right side up. Give Frank Pierce credit for this, at least, for it was his spirit that did it."

Toward his own country in general and New England in particular Hawthorne's feelings were curiously mixed during those years of exile. He loved it as his native land and as the home of all who were dearest to him. But he disliked it in its official and political aspects.

"I do love old Massachusetts, in spite of its ten thousand varieties of nonsense."

"It will be many a long day yet before we see the old house again, perhaps never, for you seem to be in such a confounded mess there that it quite sickens me to think of coming back."

"I have Uncle Sam on the hip, and good enough for him, the infernal old villain. If I could only make up my mind to be as much of a rogue as he is I might remain in office and thrive by it."

"I have seen none of the American newspapers by the last steamer. Well—I'm sick of America and feel it a relief to escape all knowledge of its affairs for a week or two, for I have been more bothered with my countrymen and their troublesome peculiarities since coming to England than ever before in my life."

These are a few passages taken here and there from his letters.

On October 10, 1856, he writes more at length:

"The wise ones prophesy great commotions in France and all over the continent. Very likely there will not be a quiet spot to live in just when we are ready to go thither, but there seems to be no stormier prospect anywhere than in our own country, and I find myself less and less inclined to go back there with every budget of news that comes from there. I sympathize with no party, but hate them all—free soilers, pro-slavery and whatever else; all alike. In fact, I have no country, or only just enough of one to be ashamed of, and I can tell you an American finds it difficult to hold up his head on this side of the water in these days. The English expect to see the republic crumble to pieces and are chuckling over the anticipation. This is all nonsense, of course, but it grinds me, nevertheless."

Of course these strictures on his country and his countrymen must be taken in the right spirit of humorous exaggeration. As Hawthorne's son urges, "Allowances must always be made for Hawthorne's humor, for his love of playful exaggeration, and for occasional audacities and recklessnesses of expression which he permitted himself only in such confidential communications."

Desire to gain a competency for himself and for his family and to provide for his old age was very frankly one motive which had prompted Hawthorne to accept the Liverpool consulate. But there were other motives. This outlet to Europe was for both Hawthorne and his wife the unlooked for realization of the dreams of a lifetime.

Of course, there were the inevitable disillusionments. Europe was not quite the spiritual and intellectual El Dorado they had anticipated. The consulate was not quite the bonanza they had expected.

The consulate at Liverpool was the richest in the gift of the United States. But (honestly conducted) it was not a fourth part as rich as the Hawthornes had been led to believe. This fact Mrs. Hawthorne thus communicated to her father:

"Oh, no, dear father; we do not live 'in grand style,' neither do we intend to have much company. We could not afford it, for, though so many persons at home, who might be supposed to know, account the consular income here to be so great and the arrival of ships so abundant, they are sadly mistaken."

Need for Strict Economy.

The necessity for strict economy was recognized, of course, by Hawthorne. He sends his money over to Boston to be taken care of by his friend Ticknor. "Invest, invest, invest," he cries on March 3, 1854. "I am in a hurry to be rich enough to get away from this dismal and forlorn hole. If I can once see $20,000 in a pile I sha'n't care much for being turned out of office, and yet I ought to be a little richer than that. It won't be quite so easy for me to live on a thousand dollars or less as it used to be. I am getting spoilt, you see."

That he would lose the consulship if Pierce were not re-elected to the presidency he foresaw and without any qualms. But meanwhile he was continually harassed by fears (not unjustified) that congress might any day cut down the emoluments, such as they were, of the office. These fears reappear ever and anon in his letter to Ticknor. Here are some illustrative extracts:

June 7, 1854. "I shall fairly bag $10,000 within the year and my expenses have been very heavy, too. I am terribly afraid congress will cut down the office with a salary; in which case it will not be worth holding. If I can have the full swing of the emoluments for one more year I shall not grumble much; though (to tell you the truth) I do not see how it will be possible for me to live hereafter on less than the interest of $40,000. I can't imagine how I ever did live on much less than that. It takes at least $100,000 to make a man quite comfortable—don't you think so?—and even then he would have to deny himself a great many very desirable things."

August 15, 1854: "I observe that a bill for the remodeling of the diplomatic and consular service was reported in congress August 3, and referred to committee of the whole. I suppose they can hardly have acted on it in the brief remnant of the session, but if so it cannot fail to have been most disastrous to my official interests. However, I am so sick and weary of this office that I should hardly regret it if they were to abolish it altogether. What with brutal shipmasters, drunken sailors, vagrant Yankees, mad people, sick people and dead people (for just now I have to attend to the removal of the bones of a man who has been dead these twenty years) it is full of damnable annoyances."

October 12, 1855: "I shall not be content to hold on here in expectation of $30,000. A smaller sum must answer the purpose, and I have little doubt that congress will make such changes for the worse in the law that I shall find it advisable to resign. The sooner the better; money cannot pay me for the irksomeness of this office—at least only a very large amounts can do it—and I really think I should be glad to have congress put the question of my remaining here at rest by breaking down the office altogether. This very morning I have been bored to death by a woman, and every day I am beset with complainants who I wish were all at the devil together. But I can get along well enough with men if the women would only let me alone."

When Buchanan succeeded Pierce as president of the United States Hawthorne cheerfully anticipated his own removal by sending in his resignation. "No words," he tells Ticknor, "can express how I long to consign the consulate to the devil, or to any other successor whom the president may appoint."

At last, in September, he hears that his successor has been appointed in the person of Mr. Beverley Tucker of Virginia. "Nobody," he exclaims, "will pray for his safe passage and speedy arrival more sincerely than I shall."

And so Hawthorne gladly laid down the cares of office to take up that residence in Italy which was to be made memorable by the production of his masterpiece, "The Marble Faun."

Yet, though the cares had weighed heavily upon him while he was in office, his experiences were not all unpleasant, as may be seen from the article "Some Consular Experiences," which he contributed to the Atlantic Monthly and which is now incorporated in the volume entitled "Our Old Home." Some of these experiences had already been told in his letters to Ticknor. For example, on May 27, 1855, he had written:

"It is a very disagreeable office, but some amusing incidents happen occasionally; for instance, I send home by this steamer a doctor of divinity who has been out here on a spree and who was brought to my office, destitute, after a week's residence in a brothel! I wish you could have heard the lecture I gave him. He shook in his shoes, I can tell you. Not knowing whether I should ever have another opportunity of preaching to a doctor of divinity (an orthodox man, too), I laid it on without mercy; and he promised never to forget it. I don't think he will."

Unfortunately, one thing which the reverend doctor did forget was the passage money to America, which Hawthorne had generously advanced him.

Another anecdote related in the consular experiences is thus alluded to in one of these letters:—

"I made a convert to total abstinence yesterday. It was a sea captain, who has fallen into dissipated habits, and I preached to him with such good effect that he asked me to draw up a pledge, which he signed on the spot, and declared that he felt himself a new man. On the strength of this good deed I thought myself entitled to drink an extra glass or two of wine in the evening, and so have a little bit of headache."

From these letters it appears that Hawthorne's heart could always be touched and his purse strings loosened by any fellow countryman who was stranded in England and who appealed to him for assistance.

Thus, under date of April 9, 1857, he writes:—"I enclose the items of a small amount paid by me for the relief of three Americans— a musician, a painter and a teacher—who threw themselves on my tender mercies. Mr. Tyng (whose drafts you tell me are not yet paid) had been shipwrecked and absolutely needed the money which I advanced. His father will unquestionably pay it. Did you ever collect £30 or thereabouts from an old Mr. Richardson whom I sent home? I have a strong faith that he is an honest man. I wonder what will become of all those vagabonds when I quit the consulate."

In the Philippines and on the Pike.

By MARTHA L. ROOT.

A DAY on the Philippine reservation at the world's fair is something to set one thinking. One may believe he knows what savages are, but a close observation of the Iggorotes (pronounced Ig-go-ro-tes) may convince him that never before has he seen the "real." This Philippine exhibit is the largest single display at the fair. It covers nearly 50 acres and cost over $1,000,000; as there are some 60 distinct tribes in the islands at home, there has been no lack of interesting material for the village groups represented here. It is true there has been considerable comment upon the costume or rather lack of costume of some of these natives, but Secretary of War William H. Taft, Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of State John Hay, and Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson have visited the villages and far from being shocked, they were edified at the naive simplicity of the islanders. Also, Anthony Comstock, censor of morals for New York said: "I see nothing immoral in the customs or dress of the Philippine villages." They should, I believe, be written about because they are one of the most talked of features at the fair. Everybody asks: "Where are those Iggorotes? I want to see them." To see these strange tribes is an experience one cannot afford to miss. There is nothing on the Pike that compares with this unique exhibit.

It is most instructive to begin down in the Iggorote settlement at the lowest point of civilization, and follow from village to village up to the keen intelligent Filipino scouts, who are so rapidly taking on American civilization.

These Iggorotes, a tribe from Northern Luzon, are the "Indians of the Philippines," who represent the real Filipino about as much as the American Indian represents our United States civilization. They are the lowest of all the tribes in ignorance and morals. You look upon them in their innocent depravity and you cannot think of them as either good or bad, for they have absolutely no standards of right and wrong, and no religion. They have no shame because they are not conscious of why they should be ashamed.

Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden could not have lived more simply. The men wear nothing except a breech cloth, which is a sash about the loins. The women don more apparel, a long piece of cloth draped rather tautly round and round the limbs, and a waist of almost any description. The Iggorote women, however, must have earrings to be fully dressed according to their instincts—one could hardly say their ideas, for they do not have those. They wear long heavy jewelry in their ears, and it was revolting to see many beautifully shaped ears haggled through the lower lobes to admit—spools! our ordinary wooden spools, the sizes that are used for numbers 30 and 40 thread!

Bitten By the Microbe.

Such are the people you will see. They are deep bronze or brown in color with straight glistening black hair, innocent, satisfied eyes with no scintillating rays of quick intelligence. They are not bred so dull that they cannot learn, only so far they have been immune from the epidemic called civilization. It's all over with them now, though, for its contagion has caught them. The fearless Iggorote maiden has learned the words and repeats them, "Iggorote no good. Americano good. I much like Americano. I no like Iggorote. You like Iggorote, eh?" This tribe of islanders at our exposition, though their scant garb and wild manners do not permit them to go about the fair as some of the other natives do, will carry back to their land stories of the white man, and will wish to imitate his ways. The Louisiana Purchase exposition, backed by the American government, may be the great awakening of a new life for these savages who for thousands of generations have been in mental darkness.

There is need enough of enlightenment—and particularly in their diet. These satisfied-go-lucky men are inordinately fond of dog meat. To them, our chicken and waffles suppers are "dishclouts" to their delecatessen dish. They give the women none of this savory efast, it is reserved for the lords of creation alone, and how they eat! They smack their lips and laugh for the sheer joy of living. All American culture cannot produce such absolute satisfaction as the Iggorite gets from his dog dinner.

I watched the domestic science demonstration, the preparation of one of these meals. It takes a heart of steel and an armor plate stomach to watch it through, but one who sees everything at the Iggorote village will appreciate how far he himself has advanced along the road of civilization.

In the village on Saturday morning, a strapping, handsome Iggorote young man of about nineteen led two dogs, a poodle and bull dog, into a circular stone enclosure about as large as a good-sized kitchen. This inclosure was walled up about three feet. In the interior on the ground set a tin pail of water, some stones, kindling and logs, and a big iron kettle. The Iggorote killed the dogs (I couldn't say how, for I turned away), but when they were dead, the savage built a fire, washed his hands in the pail and dried his hands by rubbing them along the stone wall. He then picked up this same bucket of water and poured its contents into the kettle. When the water was boiling he turned his attention to the canines. The poodle and the bulldog quickly had their tails cut off, then they were singed—Ugh! what a smell! and presto! into the black iron pot they went without any more ceremony. Three hundred people watched this performance and 10,000 others went away disappointed because they couldn't see a thing.

While the pot boiled, I went from hut to hut as other people did, to see the women islanders "at home." The housewives were boiling rice over one hearth and beef over another, also getting ready for this great feast. The younger women smoked ceaselessly; when smoking cigarettes they carry their long slender pipes in their hair, but mostly these pipes are between their full red lips. Babies of three and four years cried for cigarettes. I gave one little fellow of three and one-half years a few pieces of Reymer's best candy, which had come all the way from Pittsburgh. The ungrateful youngster tasted it and threw the pieces into the mud, stamping down upon them and actually screaming his disgust at anything sweet—they are heathens if they will not eat Pittsburgh confections!

While most of the women stayed at home, the men of this village in the theater went through a weird dance, all the time pounding tom-toms, brass pans, and chanting something. It was not a religious rite, as they have no creed. However, it served one admirable purpose, for the continuous dancing gave the men a prime appetite for the dog feast.

Bow-Wow a l'Epicure.

At 12 o'clock I came back to the demonstrating kitchen where the dogs were still boiling away in their rich brown gravy. A moment after my arrival, a mishap occurred. The kettle tipped over and spoiled all the contents. The Iggorote was vexed as any other cooking teacher would be to see his forenoon's work ignominiously upset, but he tasted an ear of the poodle and decided the meat was cooked to a turn. Picking the dogs up and throwing them back into the pot, he put out whatever of the fire had not been quenched by the gravy, and then went for his comrades. The tom-tom dance stopped short, and the Iggorotes ran over to the inclosure.

The canines were put upon a round platter made of matting, and at once a wild scramble was begun to get possession of the dog teeth. The teeth seem to possess a charm and are used for ornaments—chicken wishbones are not to be compared to the value of dog teeth with the Iggorote. A young boy succeeded in getting the most of these charms, but a bigger man in the group brutally took them from him.

By the time the teeth were fought over the dogs were torn into small pieces, so each man whittled a stick and "speared" the flesh, taking it thus to his own hut. In the huts each woman had a plate of rice cooked very dry and her own plate of beef. Her lord's feast was put on a third platter and they sat down with their children to eat this food with their fingers—there is great economy of dishes with them.

I left them at their repast and went next to the Negrito village, where the "oldest inhabitants" of the Philippine archipelago live, at least the ethnologists say so. They are the aboriginal inhabitants of the islands, antedating the Malays by many centuries. They are a little dark people of pronounced negro appearance, having "kinky" hair, and averaging about four feet three inches in height. The savage Negritos are described by one traveler who saw them in their own land as looking "like African negroes seen through the reverse end of a field glass." They are of the pure Negroid type, sooty black in color, with short and wooly hair, flat noses, protruding lips, but in stature little more than dwarfs.

At home the men wear a strip of bark cloth twisted around the waist, and the women sometimes wear small cotton cloth petticoats. In St. Louis they wear a little more clothing because of the cooler climate. The Negritos here seem weak, and timid, as if they must soon die out, they are much less happy looking than the robust Iggorotes. There is something deeply pathetic about these little savages, so subservient in all ways. Into one house where I went the mysterious stork was destined to come that same night bringing a baby boy. Husband and wife sat together in this tiny hut, where the latter was preparing supper. She was only 30 years old, yet her face was more wrinkled than any American woman's features at 65; these people age earlier than any tribes so far known. The woman's dress consisted of about three yards of red calico wrapped about her skirt fashion, and an immense red bandana handkerchief served as a waist. In her house, supported, by the way, with the regulation nine posts, there were two slatted bamboo shelves; one devoid of a particle of bed covering was the cot, and across a narrow aisle was the other shelf which did duty as a pantry, for on it was a bag of rice, two platters and a scant piece of red calico. Under this shelf at its outer edge was suspended an iron pot in which rice was being cooked. The hearth, as I saw it, was simply a mat of leaves over which earth was spread; on this she burned little sticks, two at a time, with twigs in between.

This was the primitive home where the stork brought the Negrito baby. The next morning's paper had in headlines "Filipino Baby Born at the Fair." The infant was named Louis Francis Wilson; Louis in honor of St. Louis, Francis after President Francis at the exposition, and Wilson for Dr. W. P. Wilson of the Philippine board. This boy is a very important member of society. A few weeks ago when a girl was born in this village her arrival was regarded as an omen of evil by the older and more superstitious members of the tribe. Her parents explained that the first child being a girl and born in a strange country meant nothing short of a warning of some great disaster to their people. When the little one died two days later, no sorrowful mourners followed it to the grave. With the case of the boy all was different. There was great rejoicing in the Negrito village and the event was celebrated with native dances and songs according to the pagan customs and ideas. The boy baby tipped the scales at one pound and a half, but Dr. Wilson said at that he was a fine, big, healthy boy.

A Wedding Scheduled for July.

Pittsburghers who come in July may be fortunate enough to see a wedding in the Negrito village. A bamboo ladder has just been built which signifies something. A Negrito bride-to-be is chased and captured by her lover. Then an old man drags them both up this bamboo ladder and douses them with a coacoanutshellful of water. Descending they kneel and the old man places their heads together, which ceremony makes them husband and wife. A Negrito honeymoon is spent in the mountain wilds; it lasts until the sun has reappeared five times after the wedding.

These people with the true chimpanzee profile pray neither to the Christian's God nor to the Mohammedan's Allah, but they say certain words to their own Hantu, which may be either a good or a bad spirit. Among other Hantus is one of the stomach ache.

These Negrito tribes are supposed to have come originally from Africa, but there is no historical record to prove this. They are rapidly disappearing as a distinct tribe, yet at one time they were the masters of the Philippine archipelago.

One cannot digest too many facts about any tribe, and by the time Pittsburghers have finished the Negrito village they will be tired and hungry enough to come back to the Philippine market square and eat a lunch. At the American restaurant one may order an elaborate luncheon or get a ham sandwich 10 cents, coffee 5 cents, and German pancakes 5 cents. In the noon hour people begin to figure out what the day's trip is going to cost. It is 25 cents to go into each of the different villages and sometimes a little extra for the native theaters. The exhibit palaces and general grounds are all free. Near the restaurant are the Philippine midgets, a veritable Tom Thumb and his sister. It costs 15 cents to call on them. The brother is 29 years old and his height is 29 inches, the sister is 31 years old and her height 27 inches. They are both well educated and remarkably intelligent. Every day the man reads his foreign papers and has his secretary interpret to him every article in St. Louis publications. They "do" the fair systematically, and the sister, who has been greatly interested in American typewriters, yesterday purchased a machine to take back to her home in the province of Capiz on the Island Panay. These freaks of strange nature will sing for you and dance, and notwithstanding their inferior size they will compel your admiration.

The noon hour is a good opportunity to look at all the general exhibits. The insular government alone appropriated $900,000 for this display at the fair. Reproductions are made of the government observatory at Manila, the walled city, the government building at Manila and the famous old cathedral of the metropolis of the Philippines. Native villages show the everyday life of the savages; and the Philippine commission has endeavored, it says, to make a picture that is absolutely true. The exhibit covers 47 acres, upon which are erected over 20 main exhibit buildings, while the native huts, lodges, and auxiliary structures run the total number of buildings up to 100. The native population numbers 1,100 and other tribes are on the way to the fair. The tribes on the reservation include 69 Bontocs, 25 Sayocs, 18 Tinguianes, 34 Negritos, 5 Manguianes, 80 Visayans, 40 Samal Moros, 38 Lanao Moros, 5 tree dwelling Moros, 431 scouts, and 280 members of the Philippine constabulary.

Reproduced in Every Detail.

The Intramuros or walled city of old Manila is excellently reproduced. Visitors who enter the Filipino reservation from the main part of the exposition will cross a heavy, solid looking bridge that spans the Laguna de Bay. This is reproduced from the celebrated Puente de Espana, crossing the Pasig river at Manila. There are two other bridges built of bamboo across the Laguna de Bay. In the waters near by are little huts made entirely of native materials, thatched with nipa grass, both roof and side walls. In the trees not far away are queer looking houses where the tree dwellers have their habitats.

However, to keep to the exhibit palaces for a little time helps one to appreciate the villages and to understand the wonderful resources of the islands. The "Agricultural Museum" is of itself 200 feet long and stored with hosts of good things. The Forestry building shows wonderful mahoganies, tough banana and manave, and many woods of high commercial value. Ethnology has a structure 150 by 75 feet; education occupies a building 150 by 50 feet; the Government building is 150 by 100 feet; the walled city is 300 by 250 feet, and the native dwellings about the central plaza occupy 100 by 100 feet. The American government is back of this Filipino exhibit and such is the magnitude of the display that it is really an exposition within an exposition.

After the noon jaunt around the market square with its exhibit buildings, one should continue the tour of the villages. The Moros are worth seeing. They have their houses built on bamboo stilts in the water of Arrowhead lake. The Moros are the fiercest of all the tribes yet brought on to the exposition. War is only recreation to them and they were the one tribe Spain could never conquer. The chief of this tribe has been entertained in Madrid at the royal palace. Their faith is the Mohammedan religion. They are a moral race and intensely jealous of the honor of their women. The women are modest and comely. This village is a primitive Atlantic City, where the inhabitants practically live in the water. To stay in this village and examine the queer boats that can go so far out to sea, to observe the Moro weapons, and most of all the fearless courage of the reserved warriors is endlessly interesting.

Further on is the Visayan (pronounced Vi-saw-yan) village, where pretty native girls stand behind booths and show the wares of the islands. The girls speak only Spanish, and though conversations with visitors is rather limited, these dainty pleasers use smiles which do just as well as words. They are beautiful women to look upon, petite like the Japanese maidens and possess rich, low voices. Everybody comments upon the beauty of young Visayan girls and Mrs. William Taft was so attracted by them that she wrote from Washington she would like to have two of the girls in her own home after the fair. The Visayans are intelligent, refined and educated. Their orchestra is one of the attractions at the reservation. In the little theater in the village the orchestra plays daily, and their native music, though often minor in key, is exquisite in melody. The girls leave their booths to dance at this theater and the entertainment is always applauded.

Besides these native villages are the quarters of nearly 500 Filipino scouts, who are the flower of the islands. Uncle Sam, too, may well be proud of them, for they prove what the United States can do for her own. Visitors should visit their camp, watch their drills, and listen to a constabulary band concert. A half day with the Filipinos is a revelation of their possibilities and their myriad problems still unsolved.

Facts About the Philippines.

After looking at the dog-eating Iggorotes and the tree-dwelling Negritos, who would be as much of a curiosity on the streets of Manila as on the streets of St. Louis, it is only just to learn something about the real Filipino. The Philippine islands, according to the last census, contain a population of some 8,000,000 people seven-eighths of whom acknowledge the tenets of Christianity. They are a remarkably polite and courteous people and the world does not contain their peer in uniform kindness and consideration. Of course they are oriental, with the oriental tendency to say those things which are most pleasing to the auditor. This innate courtesy may have come from long association with the Spanish.

Never have the Filipino people been welded into a united whole through a common tongue. When the Spaniards came to the islands they found many tribes speaking many dialects. While Christian training was given to all by the priesthood, it was imparted through the medium of various dialects, never in Spanish. From the beginning to the end of Spanish dominion it was held to be unwise to teach the natives a common tongue, the theory being advanced that to keep the people tractable it was necessary to keep them divided, and that nothing was so powerful to that end as a babel of tongues.

American policy maintains that although a common tongue may bring rebellion and war, even those are better than peace that can be maintained only by denying to the Filipino people the first requisite to national progress.

However, our government has the satisfaction of knowing, even at this early period of its efforts, that its policy is the correct one, since it is only the Filipino who has not been brought within the sphere of influence of the American school teacher, who gives trouble. Wherever the school house stands there is the center of progress and peace. In the Philippines it is universally understood by all classes that the property of the school district, with the school teacher and children, shall not be disturbed.

After a day at the Philippines one needs a good dinner and a rest of an hour or two. At a dinner in the Tyrolean Alps on Saturday evening one portly, pompous old-young man said to our party, "You people tire yourselves all out going over those Philippine villages. Now, why don't you do the fair as I do? I do it by proxy. You see, I employ a bright, studious fellow who wants to see everything, to go to the different buildings and come down at night and report to me. When he returns tonight I'll know just as much about the Iggorotes and dog feasts as you do."

"But why are you out at the Pike now, if he does the fair for you?" I asked.

"Well, now that's different. You see I do the Pike myself!" said the complaisant old man.

Everyone will wish to be his own Piker and see this weird street in the height of its glory. I found on Saturday night that all the attractions are now completed, and they are remarkably better than in the beginning. The Tyrolean Alps and Creation have their scenes retouched and are now perfect in every detail. Creation transports the beholder back to the beginning of time when the Genesis command was given. On a canal of water in a grotesque boat, the visitor is carried backward through 20 centuries; where out of a void of steam clouds, the world is peopled anew.

An Endless Chain of Marvels.

The Galveston flood disaster which occurred in September of 1900, is vividly reproduced on the Pike. The mutoramic description of the flood begins with a realistic picture of the city of Galveston on a summer's day when the sun is sinking behind a bank of clouds which are seen floating lazily over the gulf. Standing on the deck of an incoming steamer, one can see the pedestrians move about the streets, lights suddenly flash out of the windows and doors of the city as night come on. All these sights and sounds, mingled with those of the nearby shipping, make a scene as lifelike as it is fascinating. Then a change ensues. Heavy clouds gather and shortly a terrific gale of wind sweeps out of the north. Rain comes down in torrents and the fairest city of the south is finally engulfed in the embrace of death. It is all so realistic that the spell cast over one is startling.

But to get far away from all the sights and sounds of this cosmopolitan street with its dazzling pictures we can go from "New York to the North Pole." We board the ship "Discoverer," which lies at anchor in real water. Passing beyond New York with her Statue of Liberty the Discoverer creeps down the river steaming for the north. Clouds gather and there is a storm at sea, but the good ship goes straight on towards the land of ice. The temperature goes far below zero and frost covers the sides of the vessel. The ice closes in around the ship till she is fast bound. Then we decide upon an expedition and make a dash for the pole over the ice itself. The surface of the ice field is constantly changing, and all around us is the splendor of the Arctic night. Millions of stars light our way and the glory of the aurora borealis indicates our goal. We reach the pole and plant our American flag —the first flag at the North Pole.

Santos-Dumont may go in his airship on July 4, but the Pike's aeronautical contrivance in "Under and Over the Seas" takes visitors from Paris over the Atlantic and back to St. Louis in just 15 minutes. Can Santos beat that?

The ostriches came this week, so now if the jaunting cars of Ireland, the camels of Asia or the jinrikisha of fair Japan fail to please there will still be the new amusement of being driven in carriages drawn by beautiful ostriches.

Near the ostrich farm is Hagenbeck's zoo. It is one of the best and most instructive features of the Pike. This entire street of shows presents the most wonderful aggregation of buildings, peoples and amusements which the world has yet beheld. Thomas R. MacMechen, the able press agent of the Pike, says that the vast lesson is a mighty drama of civilization played on an Olympian stage. Wallace Irwin has a homelier opinion than Mr. MacMechen, but it, too, hits the truth:

What's the use to cross the ocean and for weeks or months to hike
When the world in twenty minutes can be saw along the Pike?

MUSIC.

SINCE the successful invasion of the German grand opera field by an American girl, Miss Geraldine Farrar of Massachusetts, sweet-voiced daughters of Uncle Sam have found a warm welcome there. The Berlin critics predict an especially brilliant career for Miss Eleanor Kessler, a Pennsylvania girl, who has been engaged for the widely renowned stage of the Stadt theater at Luebeck, one of the famous "free cities" of the Fatherland. Miss Kessler is a dramatic soprano and commands 11 roles, chief among them Marguerite in "Faust" and Elsa in "Lohengrin." She will make her debut in one of these at Luebeck in October. This young woman, who hails from the little town of Chambersburg, was accorded the unusual honor of a permanent engagement at the Luebeck opera without the customary trial, or, as it is called, "guest engagement," of six months or more, her voice having captivated the management at first hearing.

After a course at the School of Industrial Arts in Philadelphia and three years as soprano at the West Philadelphia

ELEANOR KESSLER.

Presbyterian church, Miss Kessler came to Milan for operatic study with the celebrated Italian master, Lamperti, and for the last two years has pursued her work with Prof. Catenhusen of Berlin, whose talent as a trainer for the operatic stage is well known in America, where he lived for many years. Miss Kessler acquired what few American singers have been able to achieve—a remarkable German diction, which her masters pronounce faultless. She is a tall brunette of striking grace of carriage and possesses natural dramatic talent. Fellow countrymen and women who have watched her preliminary work in Berlin predict triumphs for her both on the German stage and in her own country, where she purposes eventually to sing and live.

The ninth season of free organ recitals at Carnegie Music hall, Schenley park, will be brought to a close this afternoon. Since this important series was inaugurated there have been given, including today, 682 recitals. As a means of popular education in music there has been no greater influence here than the free organ recital, and it is gratifying to say that these recitals were never more popular nor as highly valued as they are today.

Edward J. Napier, who has been substituting for Mr. Lemare during the month of June, and who will play this afternoon, has chosen a fine program, largely from among modern composers.

The organ compositions include the march in C major by Wely, Fugue by Buxtehude, Rondino by Wolstenholme, and by request the Marche Nuptiale by Guilmant. Buxtehude was a celebrated organist and composer born in 1637 in Denmark; when Buxtehude was at the highest point of his reputation Sebastian Bach was a young man and often made a journey of 50 miles to hear the Sunday evening services at Luebeck, inaugurated by Buxtehude at the Marien-Kirche. Another strictly organ composition in the first part of today's program is the Dialogue d'Amour by W. K. Steiner of Pittsburgh.

Three composers are represented by transcriptions; the first Haydn, whose "Clock Movement" from one of his favorite symphonies is chosen; then follow two contrasting numbers by Delibes, the Valse Lente and "Pizzicato," from his suites "Coppelia" and "Sylvia," two of the daintiest numbers of the recent French school. The third transcription and the piece that closes the recital and the season is the Overture to Wagner's "Rienzi," a very dramatic work based on the old Italian manner, making a fine ending for the excellent series of June recitals.

THE ADVANCE OF THE TORPEDO CRAFT

HOW THE LESSONS OF THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR WILL ENLARGE THE SCOPE AND SIZE OF THE SCORPIONS OF THE SEAS. NAVAL CIRCLES KEENLY INTERESTED

By Commander J. D. Jerrold Kelley, U. S. Navy.

THE war in the Far East has rehabilitated torpedoes and torpedo craft and has called for a readjustment of opinion on warship construction the world over. The inevitable effect of the primary Japanese successes has been to intensify the differences between two schools of naval thought—on holding that the torpedo is the most terrible instrument of destruction placed in our hands and the other that heretofore it has been too complicated and unreliable a weapon to warrant development. Torpedo enthusiasts have, as usual, plunged into unreasonable prophecies and have emerged with impossible promises. As a rule battle ship advocates, and these constitute a very great majority in all services, still hold to their faith while acknowledging the proved value of torpedo craft. A few of them indeed go so far in a stubborn opposition to the claims of their opponents as to deny that anything has been achieved that disturbs the views fortified by all previous experience. But this is sheer idleness, as the truth probably lies nearly half way.

New light on old problems has certainly been let in;

but while this tends to clear the situation it does not show that the armored type has been displaced as the supreme instrument of modern war. One thing is certain. The dominating value of sea power has through the harmonious and skilful employment of all energies been reasserted. Otherwise the Japanese could not be roving the sea as they will, nor be carrying to the theater of war just as many troops as transport service and resources permit.

In the data of development it is interesting to study the record of torpedo warfare set down in a capital article in the Naval Institute, written by Lieutenant Lloyd H. Chandler, United States Navy, late commander of the torpedo flotilla that made the successful run from the Atlantic coast to the Philippines. Beginning with May 29, 1877, when the English cruiser Shah fired one Whitehead torpedo at the Peruvian Huascar, but it had not power enough to run the distance, he traces the results of 12 torpedo attacks, and finds that, discarding one doubtful case in which the Japanese claim a breach of peace by the Tsi-Yuen, out of eleven attacks four succeeded, resulting in the destruction of seven vessels. With the improved weapons now in use it seems certain to me that at least equal and probably better results should be expected today, and this record appears sufficient to substantiate all that I have ever claimed for the torpedo. While it is not a weapon that will revolutionize warfare or lead to the abolition of other types of ships, it is an arm far too valuable to be abandoned, and it is one that will well repay the care and attention necessary for the maintenance of a properly organized torpedo service.

The Modern Torpedo.

The Whitehead torpedo employed in our service, except on board the Iowa, where the Howell is installed, is technically known as an "automobile" weapon, in contradistinction to the "dirigible" type, which is electrically directed by means of wires from an operating base. The form of this complex instrument varies, but popularly speaking it is a cigar-shaped vessel separated into various compartments. Counting from the bow these isolated spaces are assigned (1) to the war head, (2) to the air flask, (3) to the immersion or diving chamber, (4) to the engine room, (5) to the after body, and (6) to the tail.

Extending beyond the war head, which contains the guncotton charge and the percussion igniter and its charge, is a screw fan free to revolve. After the torpedo has run a distance of about eighty yards this fan unscrews sufficiently to put in operation a percussion firing apparatus. Should the fan strike an unyielding substance, it and the spindle on which it revolves and the firing pin are driven against a fulminate of mercury percussion cap. This impact detonates the dry gun-cotton firing charge, and the latter ignites the wet gun-cotton contained in the war head. The air flask, occupying nearly two-thirds the entire length of the weapon, holds the compressed air used for driving the machinery.

"There is no doubt in the minds of officers," declares Commander Murdock, "that a torpedo exploded alongside or under a vessel will cripple if it does not destroy her. Argument must therefore focus on the single question, Can a torpedo be made to hit? Or, in one word, on its reliability. Nothing in the world can determine this but actual trial. And it is noticeable that all officers who have had extended torpedo boat service agree with Lieutenant Chandler that the torpedo ranks with the gun in reliability. One expert puts it that the torpedo excels the gun in accuracy, from the fact that its errors are all in training, the serious question of elevation being eliminated."

Many improvements have been made in the torpedo and in its launching apparatus within the last few years, though the secret of these is jealously guarded. Among the most ingenious is one that enables the commanding officer of a vessel carrying torpedoes to point his ship at the spot he desires to hit and then by an electric firing gear to discharge the torpedoes from all the tubes simultaneously and in such a way that they will after striking the water turn and run parallel to the course of the ship. With a three tube boat, like the Morris, for example, he could thus discharge three torpedoes, running into a danger zone about 100 yards wide, one on each side of the zone and the third down the middle of it. The possibilities of a hit under such circumstances are enormous.

The vulnerability of huge ships, always more or less accepted by the sober mind, is now generally conceded, but this, let it be kept in mind, is a vulnerability open not only to lucky torpedoes but to equally lucky shell and shot. Unless this be true Chemulpo has left no lesson.

Ships Without Torpedo Tubes.

A number of battleships and armored cruisers have lately been built without any provision for a torpedo armament, and while foreign constructors have marveled at this failure to utilize so valuable an energy our officials charged with the policy of design have claimed good reasons for a policy that has now been reversed. They said, for example, that the torpedo was an erratic and unreliable weapon and that its maximum range was limited to 800 yards. It was argued also that the vastly increased power of guns must cause sea actions to be fought at long ranges, beginning at 6,000 yards and working in, but never closing nearer than 2,000 yards, and the battles of Yalu and Santiago were cited as proofs of this contention.

Experiments and inventors have been busy, and finally they have produced a weapon that has been fired with facility and accuracy at variant angles and in a range of 3,000 yards has hit the trial target regularly. It is true, as some objectors insist, that tidal currents may affect the path of the weapon, but not the sea waves where the immersion is sufficient and the automatic controlling gear functions. The old theory that battleship must fight battleship has also been replaced by the belief that the supreme test of the future will be found not in a series of duels, but in fleet actions. So even at 3,000 yards, the maximum distance at which guns are sure of hitting—the stray and unusual lucky shot excluded—a flight of under water discharged torpedoes is fairly certain to find one target or more. Then, too, the moral effect on the crews has to be considered. The torpedo is, if nothing more, an additional weapon which at the outset of an action puts us on an equality with our rivals, while no possible initial advantage is gained by its omission and no excessive penalty in displacement is paid by its addition. These broader views have finally prevailed, and the latest official determination is to equip all armored vessels—and possibly some of the superior cruisers and scouts—with submerged torpedo tubes. In the heavier ships the long range and in the lighter vessels and the destroyers and torpedo boats the short range torpedoes are hereafter to be installed.

Too much stress cannot be laid on the value of torpedo vessels as schools of practice and training. It is believed abroad that the experience gained on board torpedo destroyers is the very best preparation for future command that can be given to young officers. Torpedo flotillas supply in the most concentrated and least wasteful form the opportunities that develop the highest qualities of the seaman, and duty on board of them reveals the aptitude for command, and furnishes the experiences that foster self-reliance, responsibility and readiness in emergencies. It is a rigorous school, the last place for dullards and laggards, but the rewards are commensurately great and the work is eagerly sought.

Our inferiority in the number of vessels commissioned for this duty counts tremendously against an all around naval efficiency and calls for a new order of things as soon as the emergencies and the deficiencies in personnel permit. If we are to be guided by the best foreign experience, and notably by the lessons of the present war, many divisions of torpedo craft must hereafter be kept in commission and the duty be made attractive to the best talent of the service and be of a nature that will yield the greatest profit. Paradoxical as it may seem, comparatively long periods passed at sea do not supply the best training. In France the torpedo service is deemed to be above all a school of pilotage. Night exercises are particularly insisted on, as destroyers will have to fight mainly at night, and for this reason the training and experience that enable officers to carry their vessels safely into difficult and unlighted channels are of the highest importance.

JOSEPH O NATHANSOHN AND JOHN LANG, LOCAL IMMIGRANT AGENTS

By JOHN P. COWAN

THE raw material for the making of the American citizen is to be seen in great quantities in Pittsburgh this summer. In the rough as it arrives at the local railroad stations it appears to be a quality of goods that would stand little polish—too coarse for the sterling product for which it is intended and ruined apparently by the interior processes of old world civilization. From this rough quartz, however, time will work a wonderful change, and in another generation these stolid, open-mouthed foreigners that you see huddled beside a railroad coach will develop into full-fledged Americans—industrious, peaceable and patriotic.

History affirms this ultimate result of Americanization, although it is hard to believe that such good ends will be attained when you get your first glance at these new arrivals from Europe. Ignorant of our customs and laws, unfamiliar with our language and our social code, elevated but a step above the condition of serfdom, and with an eager ear that may be prone to exaggerate the true meaning of the call of freedom, they seem at first thought more like probable candidates for the almshouse and our penal institutions. Of course, there is a considerable percentage of aliens from southern Europe that will not amalgamate with the native population in this country or become citizens. They will remain here for a little time, save a small hoard of money and return to spend their days in their fatherland, America profiting by their leaving, notwithstanding that no small amount of Uncle Sam's treasure will be drained away thereby.

An interesting study is this raw material that you see huddled there on the station platform. Look closely and you will see that secreted in the base, unattractive strata are nuggets of pure gold which need only the magic influence of western civilization to refine them into the priceless gems that constitute the untarnished circlet of our boasted citizenship. The process is tedious and complicated, but the results will be practically the same as that which this decade sees in the realization of the similar good products of former periods in which thousands of immigrants sought homes on this side of the sea.

Few Immigrants Speak English.

Few English-speaking immigrants are to be found in the present great influx of America's alien population. There are some Irish and Welsh, very few Scotch and scarcely any English when you figure on the proportion of the whole number. Immigration from Germany has dwindled and the greatest number of desirable foreigners just now come from Scandinavia. Jews are coming in great numbers, fleeing from Russia, Poland and Austria. The Slavs are in the majority and are probably the least welcome. The proportion of Italians is still very great.

While they stand at the station gazing about with wide eyes at the novel sights which greet them here, the average group of immigrants would impress the casual observer as being far below the average order of intelligence. With the Slavs, Italians and those from some far interior provinces of Russia this is probably the case. You would imagine that a party of strangers traveling in a strange land would be united together by a bond of fellowship, and that they would find peculiar delight in their new experiences. You have noticed, however, that they seem to have no companions beyond the members of their own family or group. They have not yet learned the American habit of universal association and are indifferent to those of their own station and class.

But don't be too hasty with your criticism.

Beneath their rough exterior which is almost forbidding to the American, there is a story of romance with each of these forlorn travelers. The most elaborately plotted work of fiction would not furnish more thrilling reading than the simple narrative of their lives. To understand their joys and sorrows, to share their hope and unravel their dreams of success in this bountiful land of promise of which they have heard so long and where they expect to carve out a humble fortune, you must travel with them, disarm their diffidence and win their confidence and respect.

Board an immigrant train in New York some night when several hundred weary foreigners are crowded into stuffy coaches bound for the west. You will rebel against this. You will find yourself in a sort of a rolling hovel which will exhibit all the squalor of an East Side tenement and the odors. But you can't expect to study mankind and to delve for romance and tragedy unless you are willing to accept these little inconveniences.

You enter an ancient car that probably was relegated from the regular passenger service years ago. Its seats offer little comfort, the windows are small and the floor is littered with huge bundles of wearing apparel, but to travelers who have just been liberated from the crowded steerage quarters of a trans-Atlantic liner, the railroad coach seems like a palace. That they have found it inviting and a haven of rest and luxury is apparent by the way they sprawl out in the seats and dispose their grotesque pieces of baggage. The men light their pipes and in a few minutes the car is filled with the blue haze of tobacco smoke. To be sure, there are women here, but the etiquette of the immigrant train makes no exception for smoking in the presence of the gentler sex.

The men as a rule are small in stature with sallow complexions and dull eyes. Their clothing is coarse in quality, heavy in texture and tight-fitting—coats with short sleeves and trousers that do not meet the tops of their rough hide brogans. Their knot-like heads are covered with shapeless slough hats or caps with short, glistening visors. Their conversation is boisterous and excited, but some scarcely open their mouths. The women—there are few that are not burdened with little children—are garbed in shawls and kerchiefs, except one here and there whom you instantly recognize as having come from western Europe, where even the poorer classes are beginning to affect the styles of dress of their more prosperous fellow-countrymen.

A Bride-Elect's Solitary Journey.

Nearly every countenance in the car is serious and you wonder why. If you belonged to a party of Americans traveling in Italy or Austria you would be happy and cheerful and would show some interest in looking at the sights, even though you did not understand the new language. The sound of laughter is seldom heard above the pandemonium of voices. A few smile faintly at times, but altogether they are a melancholy lot—awed by strange faces. The babies are asleep and the older children, unlike their little American cousins, pay little heed to the great new world revealed to them through the car windows.

The train is underway and glides slowly across New Jersey, through Philadelphia and the long night is passed while the heavy burdened locomotive struggles on over the mountains. Long before midnight the sound of voices is silenced. Pipes go out and when the long train stops you hear a sonorous medley of snores.

A ruddy-cheeked girl with a wealth of blonde hair sits pensively in the corner of the coach. She is tastefully dressed and carries her few belongings in a small satchel. Her well-shaped mouth, her slender nose and dreamy eyes bespeak for her more than average intelligence and a soul that feels emotions that would be lost on her calloused companions. The blonde hair and ruddy cheeks indicate that she is from Scandinavia. The familiar light in her dreamy eyes tells that the English tongue is not unintelligible to her. Her quiet manner betrays education and refinement, quite unusual among immigrants. You are sure to feel interested in her mission to America, and to wonder why she chose to travel on an immigrant train.

Speak to her and she answers in broken English, but the few words in her vocabulary are used with propriety. She tells you that her home was in Stockholm, that her parents are dead and that she lived with her uncle. She was educated in a seminary and fell in love with a poor student in the university. Her family shunned him and he came to America and now is a chemist in a Colorado mine. She determined to come to him and to be married here, and left home with the little purse of funds which she could command. He would meet her in Chicago. Sleep did not come to her eyes tonight.

Her story is only one of the romantic episodes that are brought to light every time the immigrant ship sets sail from a foreign port. You would find others just as interesting if you were enabled to learn something of the life history of some of these humble travelers.

Ask a few of your would-be Americans why they came to this country. Their answers will epitomize the whole question of immigration.

"Russia is no place for a man who has opinions of his own or who is struggling to keep a family," answers a stern-visaged man to your interpreter. He comes from some of the East Baltic provinces of the czar's dominion.

"Are you coming here to escape conscription into the army fighting Japan?"

"No; to escape being consigned to slavery."

His answers are radical. It is just possible that you have interrogated a man of anarchistic tendencies and the fact that he comes from Russia may further this belief.

"What do you expect to do in America?"

"Work hard, get a little farm and raise my children in the open air and give them an education."

Abuses of the Immigrant System.

This straightforward answer banishes all suspicion of having encountered an anarchist. The man who has the welfare of his family so much at heart is no more a revolutionist than the sturdy Scotch-Irish who founded Pittsburgh. He will make a good citizen, although in the rough he may not appear very promising. Hundreds will make the same answer. Whole counties in the great northwest soon will be settled by an agricultural class from Scandinavia and Northern Russia. As a rule, these people are better educated than persons of their class who are reared in this country. They are frugal and industrious and have a frankness of manner that goes a long way in balancing their rough appearance and the prejudice against them.

Ask the crowd from southern Europe why they are coming to America and they are likely to answer that they come in the hope of "making more money." Nobody can blame them for this, but comparatively few express any desire to become citizens and there are not a few that do not understand what free citizenship means. It is when you encounter this variety of alien that you realize the abuses of the immigrant system. You have found the worthless shale in the raw product for the making of the American citizen. It would be unjust, however, to declare that all the newcomers from countries south of the Danube and the Po are unwelcome. Many of these people, especially among the Italians, come here animated by the best purposes and become peaceable residents.

Shortly after noon the immigrant train reaches Pittsburgh. The average train load numbers about 700. Of this number there are about 500 men and 200 women and children. Seventy-five per cent come from the north of Europe, but the next ship that sails up the Narrows may bring a whole boat load of Slavs, the port from which the vessel sails having much to do with the character of its immigrant passengers. At Pittsburgh the train is emptied. A few are destined here, but the vast majority go beyond the Mississippi. It is unfortunate for Western Pennsylvania that many of the least desirable class locate here. The Jews as a rule tarry in New York.

The illustrations which accompany this article are made from photographs taken by the staff photographer of The Gazette at the Union station upon the arrival of the immigrant train last week. The pictures tell a story more graphic than can be related in words. They show a characteristic group of foreigners just as they stepped from the train and stood waiting to continue their journey farther west. Those of the party who stop in Pittsburgh have just kissed their friends goodby.

Immigrant Agent John Lang, who has handled over 100,000 immigrants in the last year, "sorts out" his passengers, examines their tickets and starts them westward—rejoicing. But the most joy is felt by the perspiring agent. The average sightseer at the station would suppose that the homeseekers were penniless, but this is not the case. It is rare that they are without funds and one of the Finlanders, shown in the picture, had a pocketful of gold eagles. Nearly all who expect to buy farms in the west have from $100 to $1,000 to invest.

This is the raw material from which future citizens of the republic will develop. One hundred years hence their descendants may organize an exclusive association of the American Sons of Finland and Scandinavia. More power to them if they do!

Typical Crowd of Foreigners to Be Seen at Local Railroad Stations Upon the Arrival of the Immigrant Train.

The Truth About President Buchanan

By COL. A. K. M'CLURE.

GEN. CAMERON entered upon his second term in the senate simultaneously with the inauguration of President Buchanan. He had first entered the senate as Buchanan's successor, simultaneously with Buchanan's appearance as premier of the Polk administration, and in both instances he was an irritating thorn in the side of Buchanan. No two men could be more unlike than were Buchanan and Cameron in temperament, in taste, in method and in the trend of their intellectual forces.

Buchanan was a painstaking student, conservative, commanding respect rather than affection from his associates, while Cameron was aggressive, always looking to the end to be attained rather than to the means employed, and always cherishing the warmest attachment for his friends. Buchanan was trained in statesmanship and in its severest school. His first service in congress, covering a number of years, was as a Federalist, and while he later accepted the Democratic faith with absolute sincerity and adhered to it unfalteringly, he was not a leader whose keen perception and prompt action could be relied upon to guide a party in an emergency. He was a statesman of the old school that sedulously discredited innovations, while Cameron, without claims to statesmanship, was a consummate politician, a man of broad intellectual force and capable of employing his faculties to the uttermost when the occasion demanded it.

Cameron could be patient and conservative, or keen and aggressive, as occasion demanded, and when the new problems arose which culminated in civil war his adaptability to new conditions was vastly greater than that of Buchanan. Buchanan adhered to the theories of old-school statesmanship. He believed in the resolutions of 1798, which were known to have come from the pens of Jefferson and Madison, and that made Buchanan invest them with sanctity, while Cameron, in his eminently practical way, never took pause over the traditions or records of the past when new conditions and new necessities confronted him.

If north and south had taken counsel with Cameron during the period of Buchanan's administration civil war would have been averted and slavery preserved. Every new problem that came up Cameron was ready to meet in an equitable and practical way, and when war came he was one of the foremost to declare that slavery must be overthrown. There never was any intercourse between Buchanan as president and Cameron as senator beyond the necessary official courtesies. They had parted in their political paths as early as 1845, when Cameron became Buchanan's successor in the senate, and during the four years of the Buchanan administration Cameron ranked as a conservative Republican.

Buchanan Unjustly Censured.

President Buchanan has been very unjustly censured as largely responsible for the precipitation of civil war, and for alleged disloyalty to the government during the war. Those yet living who knew him need not be told that he would have given his life if necessary for the preservation of the peace and unity of the republic. He was responsible for permitting the south to pursue its policy looking to secession until it was too late to halt it, but when secession came he took a bold stand in favor of the maintenance of the Union, and while profoundly deploring the war against the south that had made him president he never uttered a sentence during the war that was not in favor of the union of the states, and the employment of war to any extent necessary to accomplish it. He exhibited a great interest in public affairs, although in a very unostentatious way, and wrote hundreds of letters to his Democratic friends, always displaying absolute loyalty to the government.

In 1863, when it was feared that the supreme court of Pennsylvania would declare the national conscription law unconstitutional, Buchanan laid aside the delicacy that he always exhibited in his relations with judges, by writing a most earnest letter to Chief Justice Woodward, appealing to him not to commit such a wrong against the country and the Democratic party; but his patriotic counsel was unheeded, and Woodward fell in the race for governor because the loyalty of the court and of its chief justice was distrusted.

It should be remembered that Mr. Buchanan entered the presidency under very peculiar circumstances and conditions. He did not receive a majority vote in a northern state with the single exception of Pennsylvania, where he had a majority of little more than one thousand. California, Illinois, Indiana, New Jersey and Pennsylvania gave him their electoral votes, but there were large majorities against him in Illinois and Indiana, and smaller majorities against him in California and New Jersey. On the other hand Fremont did not receive in all the slave states over one thousand votes. To be precise, he had 308 in Delaware, 314 in Kentucky, 281 in Maryland and 291 in Virginia, and yet, receiving only the vote of a single section of the Union, Buchanan had less than half of a million plurality over him.

The contest was conducted entirely on sectional issues. They were forced upon the Democrats by the radical and aggressive Republicanism that had sprung into being in great proportions almost in a day, and the solid south gave Buchanan a majority of the popular vote in every state excepting only Maryland, where Fillmore received some 8,000 majority over Buchanan. While north and south were intensely inflamed by the vehemence with which the sectional issue was pressed by the Republican leaders. Buchanan was chosen president solely because the south had stood by him in almost unbroken column, while a large majority of the northern states had voted against him, and in all except Pennsylvania, the majority refused to accept him as the ruler of the republic. With all of Buchanan's severely conscientious devotion to justice he could not but be profoundly impressed with his obligation to the south that had come forward and rescued him from the overwhelming majority of his own section.

Adhered to Old Policies.

Buchanan's fundamental error as president was in assuming that old conditions must continue to govern. He did not appreciate the fact that a new era had dawned upon the nation that could not be turned backward or even halted. He regarded the immense Republican majority in the north as a sudden ebullition of sectional passion that would speedily run its course and perish. He believed that his election to the presidency was a final judgment that must settle the sectional dispute on the basis of the compromise measures of 1850. So confident was he of the correctness of this assumption, that in his inaugural address he foreshadowed the then not yet proclaimed judgment of the supreme court of the United States in the Dred Scott case, which was regarded by him and by the south generally as the final action needed to restore sectional unity.

This error was possible to Buchanan for the simple reason that he conscientiously adhered to the old school of statesmanship that had been reverenced for more than two generations, and that he believed would always command the reverence of the nation. He started on his administration entirely confident that the sectional disturbance would be quieted, and that he would be enabled to retire from his high official trust with the country restored to tranquility.

Had Buchanan's wishes prevailed with his party there is little reason to doubt that the sectional agitation that grew in intensity during his entire term, would have been measurably or wholly restrained. The south felt that the final triumph of slavery had been won; that its right to occupy the territories was no longer to be questioned, and that even the right of the southerners taking and holding slaves in transit in free states would be accepted as the law of the land. The hope of new slave states in the territory acquired from Mexico had perished, and the south immediately staked everything on the issue of forcing slavery into Kansas and Nebraska, where climatic and all other natural conditions were against it. The policy of the violent introduction of slavery into those territories had been inaugurated under Pierce, and unfortunately had been tolerated if not approved by him.

Buchanan was thus early confronted with the problem of taking issue with the south in its then settled policy of forcing slavery into northern territory, or permitting the violent and in every way inexcusable crusade to go on. To break with the south at the threshold of his power would have been fatal to his administration, and he would have been openly impaled as an ingrate. He naturally decided not to throw himself into the breach against the policy of the south, but hoped to restrain it and prevent it from further inflaming sectional prejudices. This was the fatal step that Buchanan made at the beginning, but in judging him strong extenuating circumstances should be given due weight. He fully agreed with the south on the policy of coercion, and knowing his views on the subject, the south persisted in its midsummer madness until secession had actually begun after the election of Lincoln. It is doubtful whether under any circumstances he could have restrained the secession of the cotton states after Lincoln's election, and the greatest struggle of his life came after he had fully awakened to the fact that the tolerant policy of his administration had led to the actual severance of the states.

Cabinet Inside Truths.

I never fully understood the inside movements of the Buchanan cabinet immediately before and at the time of the transition of the cabinet and the administration to open hostility to the south and secession, until two years after the war began, when I enjoyed a most interesting and instructive all-night talk with ex-Chief Justice Black, who had been first attorney general and then premier of the Buchanan administration. I had known Black well for many years, and like all who knew him not only respected, but loved him. He was one of the most fascinating conversationalists I have ever met, and there was hardly a line of Shakespeare or the Bible or a poetic sublimity anywhere that was not stored away in his wonderful memory.

Black had located at York after he had retired from the cabinet to practice his profession. I had charge of the draft made under the state laws in the fall of 1862, and after having made the adjustment of the quotas, ordered the draft in Codorus township, York county, for a certain number of men. That township was almost solidly Democratic, there being but five Republican votes in it to several hundred Democratic. It was not surprising that no Republicans were drafted, as two of the five had volunteered and were credited to the township.

Quite a clamor was raised in the township about the alleged unfairness of the draft as only Democrats had been drafted, and a committee of inflamed citizens called upon Judge Black and demanded that he should appear as counsel for them before me to have the alleged injustice corrected. Black came to Harrisburg one evening and at supper told me what his mission was, and that he desired to be heard on the subject. I told him that any time that suited him would be satisfactory to me—that night if he specially desired it, if time was pressing, or the next day at any hour that was convenient for himself. I said: "Of course, judge, I will give you all the time you want, for there is no person whose speeches I so much enjoy, but you certainly know that I will decide against you, as you have no possible ground on which to claim relief." He stated that he expected that, but that it was business to discharge his duty.

After supper we went up to my room and drifted into conversation about old times when he was judge of the Chambersburg district, and about the war, until he finally noticed that the midnight hour had passed. He got up, put his hat on the back of his head, threw his overcoat over his arm, bade me good night, and got as far as the door, when he turned around to make some remark about what we had been discussing, and he unconsciously warmed up on the subject, slowly paced back to his chair, seated himself, and it was not until broad daylight that the conversation ended. He gave me the entire inner story of the action of the cabinet and the president during the troublous times after the secession movement began. He told me, what had not then been made public, that he had written Buchanan's answer to the South Carolina commissioners; that Buchanan had first written an answer and submitted it to the cabinet, and it was approved by all the members of the cabinet except Cass and Black. Cass resigned soon thereafter and Black took his place as secretary of state.

Black said little or nothing during the cabinet session, but after it adjourned he went to the president privately and told him that, much as he loved the president, he must sever his relations with his administration if that answer was sent to the southern commissioners. He told me that it was the only time he had ever seen Buchanan exhibit great emotion. He was silent for a long time, and finally rose up with his eyes dimmed with tears, handed the paper to Black and told him to rewrite it as he believed it should be. Black took the paper, rewrote it, and it was accepted by Buchanan without change. That act of Black saved Buchanan from adhering to his old-school ideas at a time when, had he done so, it would have been utterly fatal to his record. I may add here that after getting a little sleep and a light breakfast I looked around for Black to fix a time for his argument, and found that he had gone home, and I never heard anything more of the unlawfulness or irregularity of the Codorus draft.

Black's Devotion to Buchanan.

Judge Black was Buchanan's most trusted and certainly most devoted friend after Buchanan's retirement. Black had been for 10 years president judge in the district embracing Buchanan's native county of Franklin. He had been called to the bench by Gov. Porter when quite a young man because of a very earnest contest between Judge Thomson, then president judge (father of the late President Frank Thomson, of the Pennsylvania railroad) and Frederick Smith, a prominent member of the bar who had been speaker of the house. The contest became so animated that Porter solved the problem by appointing Black from Somerset, who was not personally known to the members of the Chambersburg bar, but his exceptional record made as president judge in that district had made him the youngest man nominated for supreme judge in 1851, and when he was elected he drew the short term and became at once chief justice. He was very popular with the people throughout his mountain counties, and was once prevented from going to congress, when the Democrats had decided to nominate him without a contest, by the Whigs first entering the field and nominating his father as the Whig candidate. He was the trusted and confidential adviser of Buchanan until his death, and it is unfortunate that he did not give posterity the benefit of his great intellectual powers and ripe experience.

He continued active in the practice of his profession until his death long after he had passed the patriarchal age. He was counsel for John C. Fremont in his serious Paris complications, and finally had him released from a criminal conviction that had taken place in the absence of the defendant, and he was counsel for the dissenting heirs of Commodore Vanderbilt, who had willed his vast estate almost entirely to his son William, and obtained a very liberal adjustment.

Buchanan fully appreciated Black, and intended to give him the position that Black most earnestly desired, that of supreme judge of the United States, but he unfortunately delayed the nomination of Black until by the resignation of southern senators the administration had lost control of the senate, and Black's nomination was not acted upon. If he had been called to the court of last resort he would have gone into history as one of the great jurists of the nation, and he would have been consistent in his loyalty to the government.

Misunderstood in the North.

Buchanan lived until 1868, three years after the war had closed, and Cameron had just one year earlier entered upon his third term in the United States senate, having defeated Curtin, Stevens, Grow, Moorehead and Forney in the race for senatorial honors. At the time of Buchanan's death he was very generally misunderstood throughout the north. Secession had begun under his administration; he had been the close friend of the men who causelessly precipitated secession, and in the inflamed passions of the time he was generally regarded as having been faithless to his trust, and not in hearty sympathy with the north. He knew how sadly he was misunderstood and spoke of it freely in private letters to his friends, but he avoided all public demonstrations or discussions on the subject, because he believed the time had not come when he could present his own vindication.

He wrote a small volume in which he justified his actions as president, and gave very important contributions to history, but he did not attempt to show his attitude in favor of maintaining the unity of the states even though it should be done at the point of the bayonet. It was not until Curtis' "Life and Letters of Buchanan" were published some years after his death that Buchanan's consistent and earnest loyalty to the government during the civil war was conclusively presented to the public, and he went to his grave profoundly respected by all who knew him, but harshly judged by many of his countrymen as a factor in creating fraternal conflict. It caused him profound grief to know that he was misjudged as faithless in the highest trust of the nation, when, as he well knew, he had been scrupulously conscientious in his devotion to the union of the states, and ready to accept his full share of all the sacrifices necessary to overthrow rebellion and preserve the great republic of the world.

Music Sharks in Paris.

American Girls Who Go Over to Study, With Dreams of a Brilliant Future in Concert or Opera, Are Fleeced and Sadly Disillusioned.

By ALGERNON C. DOUGHERTY.

WITHIN the past month, no less than 17 American girls arrived in Paris, and settled themselves here with the idea of training their voices, and becoming grand opera stars of the first magnitude. And, oh, the pity of it! Seventeen happy, hopeful women, doomed to inevitable disillusion and hopelessness!

A certain amount of misery colors every human life, and every year that passes foots up its average of woe for humanity in the aggregate. It will perhaps never be given to men to run a world that is all sunshine, but, somehow or other, it is natural to expect that the teachings of experience should help to diminish our allotment of sorrow. Yet American girls, year after year, keep on coming to Paris in droves to train their voices and sow grief.

If I speak with emphasis about this, it is because I feel with intensity.

In the course of a year, many strangely pathetic episodes pass before the eyes of the American newspaper correspondents in Paris, but none of them for poignancy or frequency leaves so dismal an impression as the case of the American girl who comes over here with roseate dreams; falls into the hands of the musical shark; is fed on lying adulation, flavored with the promise of a dazzling operatic career; is robbed of her money, her young life wasted, and is then left to find her way home again as best she may—her dream shattered pitilessly, her musical education a superficial sham, her fresh young voice probably ruined, and her heart broken from the humiliation of achieving nothing after long years of hope and diligence.

This is no overdrawn picture, but the statement of an obvious fact that ought to be known from end to end of the United States, as it is to Americans here in Paris. If our girls at home, and their parents, knew the true state of the case, they would pursue their vocal training at home, and leave Paris, and Europe generally, severely alone.

What I have said, and what I am going to say, has exclusive reference to American girls who aspire to be great singers. The same criticism will not apply at all to our young women who incline to another line of art. For those, for instance, who intend to become painters, a Paris apprenticeship to the brush is invaluable. Therefore, it will be seen that I am not warning against Paris because of its pitfalls in the path of the virtuous. I have not selected this text to preach morals, but common sense. It is to the girl with a voice that I cry "beware!" and I will tell why.

Not a Vocal Music Center.

In the first place, Paris is great in every other line of art except vocal music. In that she is a nullity. Two-thirds of her voice teachers are either fakes or fools. The fake ruins your voice from pure ignorance of the art he professes to teach; and the fool does the same thing because he follows French vocal methods, which never yet produced a great female singer, and never will.

In the second place, whether fake or fool, the Paris vocal teacher is an unprincipled leech. While there is assuredly one thing in the world that he knows absolutely nothing about, namely, vocal music, there is another subject on which he is a past master, second to none in the universe, and that is bleeding Americans. He catches them on their arrival, weeps or thrills over their voices, rhapsodizes over their future, and, by that time, has caught them in his net. A week or so later he casually lets drop the remark that at the end of two years under his training, he will have made of them such glorious, such phenomenal voices, that it will be the easiest thing in the world for him to get them star roles at the Paris opera.

When two years have rolled around he recommends another year under him "to finish off," preparatory to electrifying the world. If the pupil has ducats enough left to take another year, her doom is delayed by just 12 months. Otherwise he tells her that her voice "has fallen off amazingly" in the last month. "It is tired, that's all, so go back to America and rest it for six months or a year. And don't sing a note. You will probably recover your voice. Good-by."

Therefore, if both the fake and the fool class of Paris vocal teachers are incompetent, the American girl who comes over here with the notion of making herself a great singer, usually wastes her time and money pitifully, and retrogrades instead of advancing herself a single step.

What would I recommend for a girl who aspires to grand opera? Why, I would urge her to have her voice trained at home. In any of our big cities may be found vocal teachers of the highest order, and who are honest as well as capable. Then, when her vocal culture is finished—when her voice has been brought to its greatest perfection—she can safely come to Paris, to Italy or to Germany, or to all three, to study the mise en scene, or the stage details of operatic work. A European polishing-off is also essential for the linguistic part of the career. Most operas are generally sung nowadays in Italian, but there are some that are often rendered in French, while there are others that are always given in German.

The girl who gets her musical training in America, and is "finished off" in Europe, stands every chance of attaining her ambition long before her unhappy sister who was imprudent enough to come over here looking for high-class instruction.

A City Full of Musical Shams.

I can state it as a fact, without fear of contradiction, that of all professions in the world there is none that contains so many flagrant shams as the vocal instructors established in Paris. They are gathered here from all quarters of the world. They are making money, yes, but it is simply because the majority of people are very gullible. Trading in the artistic prestige of Paris, they realize that victims are to be had for the simple asking. The majority of these victims come from the United States. Canada, Mexico and South America also contribute a big quota.

Occasionally a man or woman that sometime or other has been under the tuition of one of these professional impostors becomes famous in opera. Out of such an enormous army of fine voices one must necessarily now and then achieve distinction. The fact is heralded far and wide, and other aspirants flock to the quack who chanced once upon a time to be the teacher of a prospective celebrity.

These men give it out that their prestige and influence are so great that they can easily obtain an appointment of leading tenor or prima donna for their pupils, whereas the real fact of the matter is that the musical world in Paris and elsewhere has no use whatever for the "graduates" of these mountebanks.

A very large proportion of our girls who come to Paris to have their voices trained belong to families in only moderate circumstances, upon whom the expenses of the two or three years abroad fall as a very heavy drain. Many of these families are indeed obliged to mortgage their homes to obtain the wherewithal, and rely with confidence upon the prospective earning capacity of the future prima donna to pay off the heavy debt. The "training" lasts from three to five years. The average pupil takes three singing lessons a week, which usually cost $5 a lesson. There are generally two mise en scene lessons each week, at $4 or $5 a lesson. To this add two "diction" lessons weekly, for each language in which they are learning the operatic scores. Advanced pupils are also obliged to have an accompanist. In other words, outside of living expenses, the average pupil disburses between $40 and $50 a week, pretty well all through the year.

While the vocal student in one of our American cities may occasionally offset her expenses by singing in a church choir, in an operatic chorus, or at private entertainments, no such lucrative opportunities are open to her here. If her voice is of phenomenal quality, or by diligent study she has attained a certain proficiency as a singer, she may possibly be given a chance to be heard in public at one of the great Colonne or Lamoureux concerts, but before she can do so she must pay $100 to the director of the concert for the privilege of being heard by his audiences. If she aspires to make her debut in one of the opera houses of the provinces, she must also pay for that privilege according to the importance of the city which is willing to hear her. If she wants to carry back to America the prestige of having sung in opera at the "Scala" in Milan or the "San Carlo" in Naples, it will probably cost her anywhere from $500 to $1,000.

Even Success is Hardly Worth While.

Let us suppose that the young American, either through the remarkable quality of her voice or through some influence, is able to win for herself a position in the Grand Opera or the Opera Comique companies of Paris. This is the goal to which many of our vocal students fondly aspire—though not one in two thousand attains it. Naturally one would fancy that a prima donna grade in either of these famous establishments would represent a princely income. On the contrary, the salary is most meager. At the Grand Opera the maximum salary for what might be called a debutante singer is $1,400 a year, or not much in excess of $30 a week. The same class of singer at the Opera Comique is only paid $40 a month. Both houses require the singer to sign a contract covering three years, during which time she is not allowed to sing for money anywhere else. At home, the same young lady, with her voice and experience, could easily earn from $100 to $200 a week.

It is an unfortunate fact that her future capacity as a money-earner in the United States largely depends upon the prestige she is supposed to have acquired in Europe. The time for that sort of nonsense ought to be regarded as past. If the American impresario and the American audience would only exercise a little common sense, they would realize that a European prestige should count for nothing in the premises. It is a matter of notoriety that the great stars of the Paris opera, and the principal singers permanently engaged in European companies, are of a grade much inferior to those who appear in grand opera in the United States. Many cases will also be recalled of men and women who enjoyed the reputation of great operatic stars in different European capitals who made dismal failures when they were heard in America.

Clara Louise Kellogg, who was for years the operatic idol of America, received her entire musical education in the United States. Compare her with some of the European singers who have been heard in America within the last 10 years! Or compare her, for instance, with the late Sybil Sanderson, an American girl who was trained in Paris, and came to the United States with a great European prestige, and made a lamentable failure.

Let Americans disabuse their minds of the notion that the opera singer who has been heard in Europe is necessarily greater than the one who has never sung there. Let them realize that the much vaunted "Paris debut" has been regularly paid for, and that the boast, "formerly of this or that European opera house," stands for the fact that the said singer was then probably drawing a salary about on a par with what is paid chorus girls in the United States. Let Americans judge the quality of a voice for themselves when they hear one, and whether the singer knows how to sing, independently of what European "successes" may or may not mean. When they do this, we shall have rid the age of a system that is both foolish and pernicious.

Progress of Democracy in China.

A marked change has taken place in the relation between the dynasty and the people in China. At one time officials exacted commodities from merchants at rates ruinously below their actual value. It was euphemistically called selling at "mandarin prices." Now all that officials and nobles wear or eat, everything they use in any of the arts of peace or in ceremonial rites, is paid for at the market price. Formerly when princes traveled, the people were burdened to pay the expenses of their journey. The tidings of their coming spread consternation. Today, when a prince makes a pilgrimage through the empire, the taxes along the route of his itinerary are in many cases remitted, as a special act of official chivalry.

In other ways more intimate relations are developing constantly between the populace and the governing classes. Many of the penal laws of China have been modified. From a maximum hundred blows of the bamboo the agonizing limit has been reduced to forty, and during the hot months to thirty-two. Formerly, when a criminal deserving capital punishment was caught in China, no member of his family survived to grieve over the disgrace. Extermination was gruesomely dealt out to all his kindred. This wholesale extirpation has been checked; and if a criminal happens to be an only child, he is kept alive and compelled to support the parents he has dishonored.—Harold Bolce, in the July Booklovers Magazine.

Senator Fairbanks in College.

Young Fairbanks, by farmwork and wagon-making, had saved $41 by the time he reached the age of 15 years. With it and one suit of clothes he traveled to Delaware, O., where he entered Ohio Wesleyan university. He turned to account his rudimentary knowledge of carpentry by working on Saturdays for a local contractor for $1.25 a day.

A few weeks after young Fairbanks arrived at college he fell and split his only trousers beyond immediate repair. It was necessary for him to borrow a pair from a fellow student, and the loan had to be continued because he was denied credit for a new pair at the stores in the town. He had to send home for his mother to make him another pair.

Working in college during the college year and in the harvest fields in vacation, he was graduated from the college and its law course at 20. At 22 he was admitted to the supreme court of Ohio, and later he went to Indianapolis.—From Leslie's Monthly Magazine for July.

BOOKS AND BOOKMEN

BY GEORGE SEIBEL

A Poet's View of Rossetti.

"Rossetti." By Arthur C. Benson. New York: The Macmillan Company. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 238 pages. Price, 75 cents.

LIKE one of Poe's fantastic and morose figures, dwelling among gargoyle shadows and languorous gloom, speaking in a hollow chaunt of mystic syllables, surrounded by strange pets and writhing shapes of art—like one of Poe's figures Dante Gabriel Rossetti sits upon the Parnassus of modern poetry. There are few that understand him, fewer that love him. His most passionate verses seem glowing icicles; sometimes his muse seems to be all spiritual beauty without body, sometimes she seems all sensuous without soul. It was this paradox that led Robert Buchanan to write his famous philippic against "the fleshly school of poetry," which may be said to have killed Rossetti in the same sense that Terry's "Back to your gallipots" killed Keats.

Mr. Benson—who is the son of the late archbishop of Canterbury, brother to the author of "Dodo," and himself a poet of gifts—tries to dispel the Poelike glamour of Rossetti's personality, but with little success. The poet was an unconscious poseur, and his poses are better remembered than his poetry. Indeed, to many people his poetry is but another of his poses. The very atmosphere in which he grew up must have given his mind a morbid and mystic tinge. His father an Italian exile; surrounded by books "about alchemy, Free Masonry, Brahminism, Swedenborg, the Cabbala," etc.; among the visitors to their home in London such figures as the demoniac violinist Paganini and the passionate patriot Mazzini—could the sensitive boy grow up other than as the lover of mystical beauty, the necromancer in melodious words and magical tints. Yet his nature was simple, devoid of artificiality; all his life long he numbered among his friends simple folk—servants, shoeblacks, organ-grinders; citizen of a democratic world, he dwelt apart in an aristocracy of dreams.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI

THE BLESSED DAMOZEL
(PAINTING BY ROSSETTI)

His earliest ambition was to become a painter. He came under the influence of Ford Madox Brown, the apostle of "emotional truth," who received Rossetti as a pupil, declining to accept any payment. Rossetti went to Brown's studio, and "was at once, to his disgust, set down to paint some pickle jars." The Pre-Raphaelites painting pickle jars! It is like the Muses taking in washing.

In the same year that he painted pickle jars, 1848, the year of revolutions and unrest, the Pre-Raphaelite brotherhood was formed. Its great doctrine was that "artists ought to paint things as they saw them, and not as they thought Raphael would have seen them." It was really a protest against the Philistine invasion of art, which put sentiment instead of beauty and painted pictures with stories to them. Whistler's protest was against the same vulgarism, but Whistler splashed his protest, Burne-Jones and Rossetti exquisitely outlined theirs. The Philistines will continue sitting on the ark in the Royal academy, and painting portraits of fat purses; while the Davids, with harp and palette, roam the mountains of the world, questing after the flower of beauty, which ever flames in front and ever fades from the fleet pursuit.

How Rossetti turned from painting to poetry, and made pictures in words for poems in color; how he turned again from poetry to painting, flitting like a butterfly from caprice to caprice, and gilding two arts with his genius—that is the summary of his artistic life. His own attitude in this life, and also his artistic ideals, have found a curious symbolical interpretation by his friend Burne-Jones. In that painter's picture of "Lorenzo and Isabella," based on Keats's poem and Boccaccio's tale, Rossetti's portrait "is traceable in the guest who, at the end of a long row, swallows with a curious zest and intentness of gesture the wine from his long glass." The spiritual likeness is more striking than the physical, for here is caught Rossetti's attitude toward life. He drank beauty and high emotion with rapt oblivion of a sordid world. Ruskin has aptly called him "a great Italian tormented in the Inferno of London."

Doubtless it was his shrinking from this cold and noisy world that produced some of his abnormal eccentricities. Hall Caine, whose "Recollections of Rossetti" were published nearly a quarter of a century ago, has given a vivid picture of the poet's seclusion at the famous house in Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, where he lived with Swinburne, George Meredith and William Michael Rossetti. Though Mr. Benson protests that this seclusion was not morbid, that Rossetti "invented the modern taste for old furniture, china and bric-a-brac" by turning collector instead of melancholy anchorite, he himself adds some touches to the picture that complete the Poelike atmosphere. The queer pets Rossetti brought home and kept in the garden—"a wombat, a woodchuck, an armadillo, a raccoon, a deer, a chameleon, a salamander, and even a zebu"—are a conglomeration grotesque and gruesome enough. The wombat, he tells us, "used to sleep on the epergne in the middle of the dinner table, and once took advantage of a peculiarly enthusiastic and absorbed discussion to descend from its place and gnaw the contents of a box of expensive cigars."

In his eagerness to divorce the poet from the pose, Mr. Benson does not hesitate to point out the bathos of that incident in Rossetti's life which has shed about him the halo of romantic tragedy. His marriage to the beautiful milliner, Miss Siddall, whose heavy-lidded, melancholy sweetness he has immortalized in the picture of "Beata Beatrix," resulted, says Mr. Benson, "in great, if somewhat fluctuating, happiness." When she died, within little more than a year, his grief was so poignant that he brought a manuscript volume of poems, just before the coffin was closed, and placed it between the cheek and the hair of his dead wife, declaring that they should be buried with her. It was the sonnet-sequence, "The House of Life," the most mellifluous word-music since Shakespeare penned his "sugred sonnets" or Petrarch his passionate adoration for Laura. "It may be doubted," says Mr. Benson, "whether in the annals of literature there is a scene which strikes so vehement a note of sorrow and self-reproach." Seven years and a half the poems lay mildewing in the grave. Then came the bathos of the sequel. Unable to remember the poems and urged by friends to recover them, Rossetti consented; one night a fire was lit beside the grave, the coffin opened, the poems taken out. "Such grace as belonged to the original act," says Mr. Benson, "was forfeited by the recovery of the book."

An element of tragic comedy also clings to the close of Rossetti's life, when he labored under the hallucination that there was an organized conspiracy against him, and even saw in Lewis Carroll's "Hunting of the Snark" a satire directed at himself. But Mr. Benson treats him with fine reverence throughout, portraying the man in the artist, as he "stands alone, in a fever of sense and spirit, a figure clasping its hands in a poignancy of agitation, and rather overshadowed by the doom of art than crowned with its laurels."

Rossetti is a poet's poet, far more than Keats; his fine-filed phrase is equaled only by Gautier's, whose "art for art's sake" was his own gospel. One is almost inclined to laugh as one reads that in the sonnet on the clergyman who destroyed Shakespeare's mulberry tree, he changed the concluding lines, which ran, altering the word "tailor" into "starveling," for fear of "hurting the feelings of some sensitive member or members of the tailoring craft." The tailors who read Rossetti are little more numerous than the icemen who carry Greek testaments. Rossetti is a poet's poet, and therefore Mr. Benson's judgment upon his verse, a poet's opinion, is peculiarly interesting. It is some of the most lucid and illuminative criticism of Rossetti ever written. He puts him below Keats, and apart from all others, "lonely and esoteric." The austere simplicity of the early poems is finely distinguished from the sensuous polyphony of the later ones. He defines the wondrous spell of "The Blessed Damozel," that antiphon of Poe's "Raven," by a supremely felicitous comment: "It is the combination of vastness and nearness in the poem which lends it an incomparable charm."

> Whose soul is carrion now—too mean to yield
> Some tailor's ninth allotment of a ghost,

Altogether Mr. Benson's volume, with its revelation of his rich prose style and rare critical acumen, is one of the most gratifying in the new series of the English Men of Letters.

Twixt Crawford and Corelli.

"The Flame Gatherers." By Margaret Horton Potter. New York: The Macmillan Company. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 417 pages. Price, $1.50.

HEINE'S song of the Asra, "who must die if love they cherish," set to music by Rubinstein, has suggested Mrs. Black's romance of passion and expiation. The scene is India, during the twelfth century, when the Mahometan invasion was well under way. The hero, Prince Fida of the race of the Asra, is taken captive in battle by the rajah of Mandu, and becomes his slave and cupbearer. He falls in love with Ahalya, the rajah's favorite wife, and she with him. To secure admission to the zenana, he bribes the doorkeeper with a priceless ruby which acted as a charm against the curse pronounced upon his race, that "they must die if love they cherish." Loving Ahalya and bereft of his charm, Fida comes nigh to death. But the rajah's minister, who also loves Ahalya and persecutes her with his advances, discovers the intrigue between her and Fida. Fida kills him, and then the guilty lovers die together.

So much for the first part of the romance, "Flesh-Fire." The second part, "Soul-Fire," concerns itself with the expiation of this sin. The souls of Fida and Ahalya are reincarnated in a single human body, that of Oman, son of a high-caste Hindu priest. The dual natures within him, one passionate and rebellious, the other timid and shrinking, are at war from the first. His wretched secret makes him an outcast from both the Brahmanic and the Buddhist religion. His struggles and sufferings are portrayed with genuine dramatic power, as the purgation of the dual souls is wrought by slow and painful degrees. At last, while Oman is a hermit in the mountains, the ruby of the Asra again comes into his possession. He returns to Mandu, where the son of the former rajah is now ruler. He saves this young rajah from folly and sin like his own, and many years pass in comparative peace, until another prince ascends the throne. There is a new Mahometan incursion, headed by a prince of the Asra; the kingdom of Mandu falls; Oman hangs his ruby about the neck of the victorious Asra chieftain; and goes away to die upon the tomb of the guilty lovers whose souls had so long been imprisoned in his body.

The book is admiringly dedicated to Gerhart Hauptmann, and this alone would lead one to suspect a symbolism hid beneath the story, as in "The Sunken Bell," "Hannele" and "Michael Kramer." The symbolism is not very profound, and the thought that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap" is so old that for the Hindu mind it has crystallized into the natural law of Karma, to them more real and certain in its operation than to us the law of the survival of the fittest. The reincarnation idea, which has been worked rather strongly in recent fiction, reminds one inevitably of Marion Crawford's "Cecilia" and of Marie Corelli's "Ziska." In "Cecilia" a vestal virgin and her guilty admirer are reincarnated in modern Rome; in "Ziska" a couple of ancient Egyptian lovers meet again in gay Paree. And this reminiscence, by an odd coincidence, symbolizes the situation in which Mrs. Black now finds herself. She is between Crawford and Corelli. She may follow the one or the other. She may school her imagination, mature her thought, refine her style, and rise to the rank of Crawford—not a lofty pinnacle, but respectable at any rate. She may torture her imagination to fantastic feats, sling cheap philosophy and slipshod phrase, and sink to the level of Corelli.

That there is danger of this is evident from a reading of "The Flame Gatherers." Everywhere are huge chunks of encyclopedia, dropped in the nonchalant fashion of Miss Corelli and Augusta Evans Wilson. On the second page of the story we are already introduced to the five castes—Brahman, Kshatrya, Vaisya, Sudra and Pariah. The whole second book is saturated with Max Muller and "The Light of Asia;" we hear much about Sankhya, Vedanta and Yoga, the Kullavagga and the Patimokkha. Local color is produced by juggling barbarous syllables: "Up, up, my Saddhivihartka!" is the way Hushka rouses Oman from sleep. In the distribution of this local color accidents will happen; thus Ahalya talks of "four of the sons of Pandu and the hundred sons of Hastinapura," regardless of the fact that Hastinapura was a city and that the hundred sons belonged to Dhritarashtra. Of course, Ahalya's ignorance is excusable, for while she is practicing the poppy dance she can't be expected to study the Mahabharata, which is about 25 times as long as "Paradise Lost." Sometimes the local color gets mixed too, as when Churi drops into Elizabethan English, "an she will." But it is immediately restored by saying "Glory to Krishna!" or something of the same sort.

Worse than these lapses are the banalities of style, the colloquial commonplaces which mar the atmosphere of the book. The first part bristles with them. A courtyard is called "charming;" Ahalya's rooms were the "choicest," consisting of "a tiny suite of three;" the long room was "furnished with every luxury that Indian ingenuity could devise;" Fida's uncle was "a power at the court;" Ahmed made himself "popular" among the slaves and learned things that would have "nonplussed certain august personages." This is journalese and smacks of the society columns. On other occasions—"Be silent, or thou diest!"—we are reminded of another class of literature, not so exalted, but more interesting. Most outrageous of all is the rajah's talk—this glorious personage, who falls asleep while his wife dances for him, gulps down three brimming goblets of water in one breath, and whose favorite phrase is "Whorroo!" addresses Ahalya in the following strain: "Beautiful one! My princess! Sit there and let me look at thee! Most exquisite one! Art thou too frail to eat?" This might be called the goo-goo style, and the ambiguity of the last sentence leads one to suspect the rajah of cannibalistic propensities.

Enough has been said to show Mrs. Black's danger of becoming the American Corelli. Her book is pretentious but cheap. Its atmosphere, despite the Hindu words, is no more Hindu than Hottentot. Its philosophy is warmed-over theosophic bosh. The central idea of the story is strong and ingenious, though morbid in its development; but as to its working out one is inclined to echo Henley's anathema against the translators of Heine. The pity of it is that Mrs. Black, if she will take time and stop straining after effects, can do fine things.

The Indians in Historic Times.

"The History of North America." Edited by Guy Carleton Lee. Vol. II.—"The Indians in Historic Times"—by Cyrus Thomas. Philadelphia: George Barrie & Sons. Octavo, 464 pages, illustrated. Price, $6 a volume.

ONE may demur to the place of this volume among the 20 that will complete "The History of North America," that place being based neither upon chronology nor logical sequence; but no one will have ought but warm interest in the volume itself, nor ought but admiration for the author's presentation of the subject. We have no satisfactory and succinct account of the American Indians. Many writers, such as Morgan, Payne and Brinton, have treated the ethnological aspect, while Indian fighters, agents or scouts have given lurid accounts of the "red devils" on the warpath. But there has been no fair, authoritative and complete account of the aborigines such as Dr. Thomas has now written, stretching from Columbus's first description of them to Gen. Miles's quelling of the Dakota rebellion in 1891.

Dr. Thomas has spent 50 years in American ethnological study, and has written a number of valuable monographs published by this department of the Smithsonian Institution. He has been assisted in the present work by Prof. W. J. McGee, anthropologist of the same bureau. The various tribes that once peopled our continent from Alaska to Panama are traced as to their origins, location, exploits, divisions, confederacies, migrations, customs, religion, lingual affinities, and intercourse or conflicts with the whites.

An ample narrative is given of the conquests of the pioneer Spaniards who invaded Mexico, Florida and the south; of the French and English in their respective spheres of influence; of the endless intrigues between Europeans and Indians in the long and bitter struggles for political and commercial advantage on the part of rival European colonists and settlers; and of the red man's long protracted contest with the settlers and colonists. Indian diplomacy and warfare in all degrees of barbarity are described, and the various agreements and concessions outlined that have gradually shorn the Indian of his empire and placed him in a position of wardship.

Dr. Thomas's qualification as a philosophical historian are finely displayed in the way he traces the Indian troubles to their true sources. He does this with much acuteness in the case of the Pennsylvania Indians, whose peaceful relations with the Quaker proprietors have long been made the subject of historical homilies. He shows that the peaceful Quakers were exceptionally shrewd in driving a bargain, and when at last the red man found he had been overreached, his indignant resentment smouldered until circumstances let it blaze forth in such atrocities as the Wyoming massacre.

The trail of blood and flame which marked the red man's conflicts with the Dutch settlers of New York and the adventurous vicissitudes of the fur trade are described with graphic vigor. The Indians of the Ohio valley afford a story of exceptional interest. Dr. Thomas gives a history of the Shawnees and Miamis before their removal to this region, about the middle of the eighteenth century, a notice of their wanderings, the record of their participation in Pontiac's conspiracy, and of their later agreement with the English, their subsequent terrible conflicts, of their attitude during the revolutionary war, of the chastisement they suffered at the hands of the American troops, and, lastly, of their final dispersion.

The part played by the Indians in the struggle between France and England and in the Revolutionary war is fully described, as well as the Black Hawk war, the Seminole and Creek wars, and later outbreaks, with an examination of the causes which led up to them.

Taking us to the great west, its many tribes from the Sioux of the north to the Apaches of the south are passed in review by Dr. Thomas. Special consideration is given to the work of the Spanish missions and its effect on the California tribes; as also to the dealings of the Hudson's Bay and the Russian-American companies with the more northerly tribes.

A valuable contribution to the Indian question is the synoptical review of the policy of the United States in its dealings with the native tribes. The author sets forth the prominent negotiations, treaties, and agreements which have been made by the government with its wards; and makes his contention clear that whatever blots may be on the record of the government's relations with the Indian, such were not the spirit and purport of the administration, but the faults of the agents. This concise statement of official contracts is an eminently valuable contribution to the work, and is followed by an able exposition of the place of the Indians as a factor in American history.

The work is full of romance—with such figures as Capt. John Smith and Cortes on one side, Joseph Brant and Maria Candelaria, the Indian Joan of Arc, on the other side, it could not be anything but romantic. At the same time it is accurate and detailed in a remarkable degree, and has a unique value among the 20 volumes of the work that should lead the publishers to issue this volume in separate form.

A Reincarnation of Amory.

"An Evans of Suffolk." By Anna Farquhar. Boston: L. C. Page & Co. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 408 pages. Price, $1.50.

The heroine of Mrs. Bergengren's new novel, like Blanche Amory in Thackeray's "Pendennis," is afflicted with a father socially impossible—a drunkard and jailbird. In addition to this Mrs. Bergengren's heroine has been passing as a widow in Paris, a perfectly innocent widow to be sure, but there she has met the college chum of her subsequently acquired husband. This husband, a fine type of Bostonian business gentleman, marries her without inquiry into her antecedents; his family, especially one Aunt Zitella, suspect that there is something queer about her; the former college chum has already come home in the first chapter of the story—here are all the materials for a domestic drama a la Pinero. But Mrs. Bergengren gives it an accompaniment of pleasant satire. Of course, there are pangs and remorse, confession and forgiveness; the genial Hawtry Evans is obliged to shoot himself in the hallway of his daughter's house, to clear the coast for the future—Mrs. Bergengren being more truculent than Thackeray, who let Amory get off without the hempen collar he had well earned. To take away the bad taste of the speckled heroine and her Iago-proof husband, we have a comic couple whose happy antics throughout the story create a pleasant diversion. And we have much sparkling conversation at concert pitch, as it behooves in Boston. Indeed, the wit of the book is much better than the emotional element.

Instantaneous Golf Photographs.

"Great Golfers." By George W. Beldam. London: MacMillan & Co. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 481 pages, with 268 action-photographs. Price, $3.50.

Verily, chess seems to be but child's play as compared with the intricate science of golf. Perhaps there is a symbolic meaning to the fact that in Mr. Beldam's 268 action-photographs his great golfers stand upon chalked squares divided into 64 compartments—as it were, trampling the chess board under foot. Mr. Beldam essays to show these golfers' methods at a glance, and with this object has made a series of cinematographic instantaneous photographs of their movements. Some of these photographs were taken in 1-1000 part of a second. There are 33 plates showing the strokes of Harry Vardon, whose assortment of clubs resembles a dentist's outfit. Then 35 plates show the game of J. H. Taylor; 20 that of James Braid; 17 that of Alex. Herd; 18 that of H. H. Hilton; 19 that of John Ball, Jr., etc. Miss Rhona Adair is the only "l dy player" represented, and we are told that she doesn't "persuade the ball along, hitting very hard indeed," which the nine photographs seem to bear out. Mr. Beldam's comments upon the hundreds of plates are exceedingly instructive, but his introductory chapter, comparing golf and cricket, will be better appreciated in England than here.

By the Author of "Red Rock."

"Bred in the Bone." By Thomas Nelson Page. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 274 pages, illustrated. Price, $1.50.

The first of the seven tales in Mr. Page's new book is a rattling story of the race-track. The horse that everyone despised and the raw country boy that rode it win a place in the great meet despite an accident that forced them to go back over part of the course. Pluck and speed were "bred in the bone." Of course, the theme is as old as the beggar's rags that covered Ulysses when he came among the suitors. Mr. Page has extended his title to cover the other stories in the volume because, as he says, they are also founded on traits of character which to him appear to be "bred in the bone." The first of the stories is by far the best in the book, and old Robin ranks with the best of Mr. Page's portraits of the other side of Uncle Tom. The weakest of the stories is "The Specter in the Cart," a ghost story without a shiver. It is rather a dry summary of the incidents that led up to the ghost, and then the ghost isn't worth while. "The Long Hillside" is also a commonplace variation of the well-worn clever-retort theme. But the background of old and new Virginia life, the wisdom and humor of the darkies, are inimitable in their natural richness, and the volume will be welcomed because it is the first collection of Mr. Page's stories since "The Burial of the Guns," issued 10 years ago.

As If Painted Upon a Fan.

"Daughters of Nijo." By Onoto Watanna. New York: The Macmillan Company. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 397 pages, illustrated. Price, $1.50.

Since a love interest is generally considered essential to the success of a story, Onoto Watanna's tale will surely please, for it has a double love interest, two heroines and two heroes. The tale is as daintily told as if it were writ with perfumed ink upon silken tablets. There is a princess, Sado-ko, "Royal Purity," who comes to love an artist-man, despite her life-long imprisonment in a palace. There is a maiden of the people, Masago, "Morning Glory," who has fallen in love with the prince to whom Sado-ko is betrothed, even as she herself is betrothed to the artist-man. The remarkable resemblance between Sado-ko and Masago is not accidental; they are both daughters of Prince Nijo. They meet, learn each other's secret, and agree to exchange places. Even so it is done, and "the gods knew best," for every one is augustly happy, even though Sado-ko has to tell honorably insignificant lies once when Masago gets homesick. "Daughters of Nijo" is a rare little romance, reads as if it were painted upon a fan, and breathes forth all the delicate scents of the land of flowers.

Mrs. Wiggs of Texas.

"Huldah." By Grace MacGowan Cooke and Alice MacGowan. Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 316 pages, illustrated. Price, $1.50.

The mother of all the orphans in Texas is a philosopher of the Mrs. Wiggs school, always ready with quaint sayings that radiate cheerfulness. "I'm very likely to do my cryin' up in short order," she says, "an' I never need no he'p on it; but I do prize somebody to laugh with. Seems like laughin' all by your lone is selfish." Aunt Huldah runs the only hotel in Blowout, and is a sort of oracle among the cowboys. Her benevolence and her humor are running a race throughout the book, and it is hard to say which wins. "The wave can't be clean and the stream dirty," is one of her bits of wisdom; another is that mice are "sent to make folks clean up and keep their food put away in boxes or jars." The story is a bit rambling, but then a ramble with Aunt Huldah is pleasant, even a rainy Sunday has its compensation.

Life in Dorsetshire.

"The Yeoman." By Charles Kennett Burrow. New York: John Lane. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 305 pages. Price, $1.50.

Life in Dorsetshire is painted by Mr. Burrow with idyllic touches. But under his idyl is hidden a dark tragedy. His hero, a stalwart farmer whose affection has been centered upon his daughter Dorcas, is the victim of persecution mania, believing that a kinsman seeks to work his ruin. The melancholy spread of this shadow, darkening his life and that of Dorcas, whom he believes to be favoring his enemy, is depicted by Mr. Burrow with subtle psychologic strokes. The character of the Yeoman is a strong piece of portraiture. The end is dramatic and moving. The grotesque dialect that crops out occasionally in the story does not impair it for the general reader.

A Splendid Book for Boys.

"Running the River." By George Cary Eggleston. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. Pittsburgh: R. S. Davis & Co. 295 pages. Price, $1.50.

The romance of the Mississippi 50 years ago, when it was crowded with steamboats, is the theme of Mr. Eggleston's story—a story of adventure and success. The young heroes, whose father is blinded in an accident, build a store boat, in which they cruise down the river, selling their goods to the longshore settlements, and encountering a prairie fire among other tribulations. The story will inculcate courage and high endeavor, along with practical common sense; while it will make the reader acquainted in a charming way with many interesting things about the old life on the river, and especially with the value of Pittsburgh coal. It is one of the best boys' books written in years.

"Brave Hearts." By W. A. Fraser. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Pittsburgh: J. R. Weldin & Co. 307 pages. Price, $1.50.

Race track stories make up the latest volume by the author of "Mooswa." The romance of racing, and its comedy, the elation of victory, the pathos of defeat, but, above all, the thrill of suspense while every neck is straining toward the goal and scores of hooves are hammering the dusty course—these are finely caught. The stories will also surprise some readers with the revelation that modern India has its racing gentry like old Virginia and Kentucky. The stories are well told but their inevitable sameness begins to pall before the dozen are done.

Our Favorite Poisons.

"The Aristocracy of Health." By Mary Foote Henderson. Washington: The Colton Publishing Company. 772 pages. Price, $1.50.

The human race is ill, Mrs. Henderson assures us, and it is all due to "our favorite poisons," of which the chief are alcohol and nicotine. There is much sense in what she says, though she needs nearly 800 solid pages to say it. She says it very well, too, and scores many a hit. "Do you take tobacco," said an inquiring friend. "No, the tobacco takes me," replied one who knew. This is a sample of her style, which is half hygienic talk and half temperance tirade.

Literary News and Notes.

"The Little Vanities of Mrs. Whittaker," a new story by John Strange Winter, the prolific author of "Bootle's Baby," is announced by Funk & Wagnalls Company.

Dickens' "Christmas Stories," immortal in their pathos and humor, have just been added to the series of Eclectic School Readings by the American Book Company.

Orison Swett Marden, the editor of Success, has written a book for young people, entitled "Stories from Life," which is published in the series of Eclectic School Readings, by the American Book Company.

McClure's for July has a paper by ex-President Cleveland on "The Government in the Chicago Strike of 1894." Another article in the same number on a related subject is Ray Stannard Baker's "Organized Capital Challenges Organized Labor."

The Reader for July has an article by Israel Zangwill on "Pierre Loti in Japan," which scores the French sea captain and author unmercifully. Another most interesting and timely article is Edwin Emerson's "Making of a War Correspondent."

The Booklovers' Magazine for July contains a number of timely and interesting articles, among them "The Philippines at St. Louis," "The March of Civilization Into Tibet," "A Great German Portrait Painter" (Lenbach) and "The Dawn of a New Era in China."

The volume on "The French Revolution" in the Cambridge Modern History, which the Macmillan Company publishes this week, is the eighth in the series, but fourth in order of publication. When complete, the Cambridge History will extend to twelve volumes, which will bring together the net results of the historical research of the last 75 years.

Wirt Gerrare, whose book, "Greater Russia," was published a year ago, has been engaged for a long term by a manufacturing firm in Germany, who make the condition that he shall not contribute to any periodical or write books during his engagement. The whole of the information acquired by Mr. Gerrare while on his travels has been purchased by his employers, for their own sole use as traders in the markets of the world.

The novelist of today is nothing if not up to date. The world's fair is only fairly open when Herschel Williams comes along with a novel about it, published by Laird & Lee of Chicago. It is entitled "Uncle Bob and Aunt Becky's Strange Adventures at the World's Great Exposition," and describes an old couple's journey from the rural districts of Skowhegan, Maine, to the beautiful Ivory city. Of course they have some amusing adventures on the Pike, where Mahala Ann tries to ride a camel and Uncle Bob makes a speech at the Creation.

"French Men of Letters" is the title of a new series to be issued by the Lippincott Company, to be edited by Alexander Jessup, and to be similar to the "English Men of Letters." Each volume will comprise a biographical and critical study of its subject by a competent writer, and a frontispiece portrait of the subject. The first volume will be on Honore de Balzac, by Ferdinand Brunetiere and arrangements have been made for its simultaneous appearance in Philadelphia, Paris, and London. The second volume will be "Montaigne," by Prof. Edward Dowden.

The coming centenary of George Sand has brought out the fact—which probably will surprise most persons—that some of the authoress's work still remains unpublished. These writings, which are now likely to see the light of day, include two plays named "The Man With the Marionettes" and "Manon," and several fragments of novels. Of these the most interesting is "Memoires of J. Paille," which begun by George Sand in 1863, was intended by the authoress to be the life story of an imaginary grandson of Rousseau. It was given up, however, when Madame Sand discovered that the same idea had been used by Claude Genoux in "Les Enfants de Rousseau." Among the other fragments is "The Queen of the Snows," which its authoress seems to have intended much on the lines of Dickens' "Christmas Books."

Burton E. Stevenson, author of "Cadets of Gascony," was born at Chillicothe, O., in 1872. He entered Princeton with the class of '94, finished his junior year there, and accepted the offer of a newspaper position at Chillicothe, serving as reporter and city editor. In 1899 he was chosen librarian of the Chillicothe public library, a position he still holds. He has been devoted to printer's ink ever since he was old enough to read and write. When a newsboy on the Chillicothe paper, he was given the liberty of the "hell-box" in the newspaper office and managed to get together a fearful and wonderful font of type. He built himself a press and forthwith began the publication of an amateur paper, which he published monthly, without a break, for seven years, first under the name of the Boy's Own and then as Light. This experience stood Mr. Stevenson in good stead when he entered college, for it enabled him to pay his own way, first by setting type at odd hours in the Princeton printing office and afterward by acting as Princeton correspondent for the New York Tribune and other papers. He was the first member of his class to gain admission to the pages of the Nassau Literary Magazine, the college monthly, and was elected to the editorial board of the Tiger, the college humorous weekly, before the middle of his freshman year, a somewhat unusual honor. It is only since his appointment as librarian that Mr. Stevenson has had the leisure for continuous literary work, for which he had been unconsciously training for many years, but he already has five successful novels to his credit, "At Odds With the Regent," "A Soldier of Virginia," "The Heritage," "The Holloday Case," and finally, "Cadets of Gascony."

BURTON EGBERT STEVENSON.

THE GENIAL IDIOT

BY JOHN KENDRICK BANGS

As to Baggage Smashing

"I THINK," began the Idiot, leaning back in his chair and gazing languidly out of the window. "I think——"

"Don't be rash in trying new experiments," interrupted the Doctor. "A sudden rush of thought to your head might result in a clot on your gray matter that would utterly destroy your insanity and make you as commonplacely uninteresting as other Idiots."

"Talk, my dear Doctor, is almost as cheap as steel common. If you have any further observations to make please reduce them to writing and then burn the manuscript," retorted the Idiot. "When I say 'I think' I don't mean that I am trying to extricate a great thought from the folds of my cerebral tissue, but that I have a mental inclination to do something. I think I need exercise, and my inclination is to go out and get it."

"A week with a medicine ball would work wonders for you," said the Doctor. "It's great for a flabby head."

"It would be better for us if you would go off for a week's tramp in the mountains," observed Mr. Brief. "Then the rest of the world would be able to get a little quiet."

"Why don't you have a punching bag up in your room?" suggested the Poet. "They say there's a lot of exercise in that."

"The trouble with the punching bag is that it hits back and then rudely refuses to apologize," said the Idiot. "What's more," he added, "there's no money in it. You might hit a punching bag eight hours a day for a whole year and be as poor as Job's turkey at the end of that time."

"Is there any exercise that is a money making investment?" asked Mr. Brief.

"Of course there is," said the Idiot. "There is letter carrying, the police force and baggage smashing. I thought I'd take up the last during my vacation which is about to begin."

"You? Take up baggage smashing? Why you couldn't lift a comfortably filled steamer trunk, much less a saratoga," sneered the Doctor.

"I could push 'em over," said the Idiot. "Or drop 'em from a height so that they'd be as badly busted as though they'd been flung a mile by a longshoreman. This is the time for the job too. I was up in the Great Northern depot yesterday and the place is simply jammed with the luggage of people who are going away for the summer. The baggage master up there is a friend of mine and he told me with tears in his eyes that there was so much of it he couldn't ruin more than 10 per cent of it. Some of the trunks he knew to his personal knowledge had gone through without a scratch, and the day's perquisites from things that were poured out on the floor and overlooked in the repacking didn't amount on the average to more than six dozen evening shirts, fourteen pairs of pajamas, sixteen collars, four silver backed hair brushes and two pairs of curling tongs. The rush of business has been so great for the last week that he hasn't burst a single trunk that contained anything his wife could use, and one suit case belonging to a drummer for a high-ball house got through without spilling a drop. The railway people are too mean or too hard up, he doesn't know which, to give him the assistance he needs, so he's at his wit's ends. It's a pretty tough thing for a man to work hard for 35 years equipping himself to be the most expert baggage smasher in the country, to gain the reputation of never letting a trunk go through without a split in it somewhere, or the loss of a strap or a caster, and then find himself at the zenith of his powers so utterly swamped with work that bag after bag, trunk after trunk and box after box go through to their destination with no evidence on them anywhere that they have been even so much as touched by a baby's finger. He told me he was afraid people would begin to complain and then he'd be kicked out of his job as the net result of 35 years of good hard honest smashing. 'Corporations have no soles,' said he, 'but they have toes, and I'm afraid I'll be up against 'em before the summer's over if this sort of thing goes on much longer.'"

"You are a consistent Idiot," observed Mr. Brief, whose trained legal mind led him easily into the detection of conflicting statements. "One minute you say you are going to get a lucrative job as baggage smasher and the next you tell tales of woe of the meanness of the soulless corporations that will not employ assistants for your friend in that line of work. You'd be a corking witness under cross examination."

"I know I would," said the Idiot. "There's nothing I'd like better than to do a little corking witnessing under oath for the pleasure of bottling up some smart Alexander of a Lawyer on cross examining bent. The most consistent things in the world sometimes appear on the surface to be diametrically opposed to each other and the clever little lawyer who rushes in to make a fool of the other chap with his inconsistencies as a basis of his line of examination more often than not as Browning said in Sordello, or some other poem whose title escapes me,

> Gets it in that favored spot
> That weds the Cerebellum and the Spine.

"All right," said Mr. Brief. "In spite of your command of the poet's lines to bolster up your argument you will be more convincing when you have reconciled your conflicting statements."

"I'm going in as a volunteer assistant, that's all," said the Idiot. "The railroad won't employ me, because it needs all the ready cash it can lay its hands on to keep the Van Toodles family in chauffeurs and roulette money, but I can take off my coat and go in and help my friend in his efforts to keep the baggage smashing of the Great Northern up to its normally high artistic standard if I want to, wages or no wages."

"Very good," said Mr. Brief. "Then where does the money come from?"

"Same dear old source—the Public," said the Idiot. "Only I get it direct. There isn't any rake-off for the Van Toodles family, the president, the first, second, third, fourth up to the nineteenth vice president, the treasurer, the general traffic manager and so on down until the thousand dollars shrinks to thirty cents. It flows uninterruptedly from the pocket of Mr. Traveling Man into the wallet of yours truly. In other words I'll wax fat on tips the while I am putting myself through a course of exercise that will make Mr. Sloboda's system look like a last week's transfer ticket."

"And you call that kind of work exercise, do you?" asked the poet.

"What do you call it, embroidery?" returned the Idiot. "Of course it's exercise. There's more exercise in it than a whole set of olympian games or an intercollegiate athletic meet. There's the hundred yards dash you take with the suit case of the chap who arrives just as the train is pulling out. There's the putting the shot event when you grab up a hat box filled with silk pot hats and bottled cocktails and shoot it fifty yards down the platform from the baggage room to the waiting car. There's the tug of war when you try to get a steamer trunk from the hands of a rival smasher and pull until the whole thing comes apart in the middle. There's the event known as throwing the hammer when you take a saratoga by the strap and swing it three times around your head before flinging it across three tracks into the tender of a locomotive or possibly, if you are real careful, in front of it, so that all the ball dresses and powder puffs it contains come piling out into the coal, or on the cow-catcher. No exercise, Mr. Poet? If you want to find anything like it, enter all the events in some field day of a first class athletic club and you'll come pretty close to finding the parallel. Another feature of the thing is that you meet such nice people. My friend has checked luggage for people like Wu Ting Fang, Harry Lehr, Lillian Russell, W. D. Howells, Mr. Dooley and Canfield and all the rest of 'em. You not only get a lot of money in tips, and plenty of exercise in baggage smashing, but you enlarge the circle of your acquaintance. Fact is, my friend has met so many distinguished people in his day from General Grant down to Hall Caine that some day he's going to publish a book called 'The Personal Recollections of a Baggage Smasher, or Notable Luggage I Have Busted.'"

"Well," said the Bibliomaniac, rising from the table, "I wish you luck in your new job. After all, it's about up to your intellectual level."

"Thank you kindly," said the Idiot. "I hope to be able to repay you. Any time you have a case of books you want to get rid of just send 'em up to me and I'll see that they are attended to. And as for you, Mr. Poet——"

"Yes?" said that worthy.

"I'll do all I can for you too," said the Idiot. "If you'll fill a saratoga with a few hundred pounds of your poems I will see that they are put into immediate and widespread circulation."

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

By Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Long Island Sound to Golden Gate
And Maine to New Orleans,
We're bound to find, as sure as Fate,
'Mid nature's grandest scenes,
On towering rock or dizzy bluff,
In letters six feet tall,
All kinds of advertising stuff
Upon the rocky wall,—
"Use Tarter's Little Splenic Pills."
"Try Milk White Soap—it floats."
"Don't run enormous grocery bills,
But live on Father's Oats."

On every rustic barn and fence
We find a whitewashed ad,
Extolling loud the excellence
Of every food and fad.
Upon the pig sty is a sign,—
"Our hams are fine as silk."
And sad-eyed cows at night recline
Beneath "Brown's Condensed Milk."
"Three dollars buys the Royal boots."
"Don't spoil your nerves with coffee."
"Jones' Hair Effacer kills the roots."
"Eat Raincoat's wholesome toffee."

Our papers and our magazines
Are filled from front to back
With automobile road machines,
Cut glass and bric-a-brac;
Some folks would sell your real estate,
And some would have you buy,
Some make you tall, some make you thin,
And some would have you "dye."
"Spitz beer is good—it does no harm."
"Stork's Food makes babies fat."
"You only need our beans to warm."
"Each biscuit kills a rat."

The trolley cars and "L" roads too
Have not escaped the craze,
And cards of every size and hue
Attract the public gaze;
For folks who have to ride awhile
And have no paper bought
Will scan the signs across the aisle,
And give them careful thought.
"Don't kill yourself with scrubbing, let Gilt Triplets do your work."
"Don't spoil your clothes with rubbing, get
Our Washer, it don't shirk."

So far our cemeteries rest
In quiet, undisturbed,
But not for long the agent's quest
Will let his zeal be curbed;
For soon the epitaphs we read
On towering shaft and pile,
Will give the name and then proceed
In something like this style:—
"Here rests Ezekiel William Brown,
A baker all his life.
His bread was good; his shop in town
Is still kept by his wife."

L'ENVOI.

Oh, mortals, when we leave this sphere
And reach the immortal state,
Let's hope we'll not see, shining clear
Upon St. Peter's Gate,—
"Be sure to buy your things from us,
For customers admit
Our harps are all harmonious,
Our halos always fit."

Irish Stories.

"And you said he had murder in his eye," asked a judge.

"No, sor," said the victim, "I think it wuz in his hand. That's where he hild the rock."

\+ \+ \+

"Did you notice no suspicious character about the neighborhood?" said a magistrate to a new policeman.

"Shure, yer honor," replied the keeper of the peace, "I saw but one man, an' I asked him what he was doing at that time o' night. Sez he, 'I have no business here just now, but I expect to open a jewelry sthore in the vicinity later on.' At that I sez, 'I wish you success, sor.'"

"Yes," said the magistrate in a disgusted tone, "and he did open a jewelry store in the vicinity later on, and stole seventeen watches."

"Begorra, yer honor," answered the policeman, after a pause, "the man may have been a thafe, but he was no liar!"

\+ \+ \+

Here is a story which Baron Dowse, the celebrated judge, once told in that exaggerated brogue he loved to employ.

"I was down in Cork last month, holding Assizes. On the first day, when the jury came in, the officer of the court said, 'Gintlemen av the jury, ye'll take your accustomed places, if ye plaze.' And may I never laugh," said the baron, "if they didn't all walk into the dock."

\+ \+ \+

"Now, Pat," said a magistrate sympathetically to an old offender, "what brought you here?"

"Two policemen, sor," was the laconic reply.

"Drunk, I suppose?" queried the magistrate.

"Yes, sor," said Pat without relaxing a muscle, "both av thim."

\+ \+ \+

He was a somewhat indiscreet burglar who was drawn into making a confession through an apparently innocent question on the part of the judge.

"What are you going to give your lawyer if he proves you innocent of the burglary?" queried the judge.

"Half the proceeds of the robbery, sor," was the unguarded answer.

Cum Grano Salis.

A poor Hindoo woman, stricken in years, was found in illicit possession of salt, which is a government monopoly. She was brought before the European magistrate. Beyond denying vigorously that it was salt, she would say nothing. The incriminating powder was turned out of the jar on the magistrate's table; he dipped his fingers in it and tasted it. The woman burst into a flood of tears.

"The police beat me and bully me to make me tell lies, and now I am brought here to see the sahib eat the ashes of my poor husband."

The old lady's life partner had died a week previously, and the so-called salt was all that remained after cremation.

Truth Stranger Than Fiction.

Jolkley—That's nothing. I knew a young fellow who went to sleep one night, and the next morning awoke a white-haired paralytic.

Polkley—Oh! Come now, I say!

Jolkley—Fact! The young fellow was a bell-boy in a hotel, and the white-haired paralytic was a guest.—Philadelphia Press.

Theater Programs.

AVENUE—Refined Vaudeville.

For this week's diversions at the Avenue family theater, Manager Davis has provided another of his excellent bills, many of the best features in refined vaudeville being engaged. It is a distinctly summer entertainment in which the component parts—mirth and melody—are combined in a manner that will no doubt prove a source of pleasure to the amusement lover. Rose Coghlan, who was the leading woman with the great Wallack stock, and who lately made such a pronounced hit in the New York production of "Ulysses," will be the headliner. This admirable player, always entertaining in whatever part she attempts, can be depended upon. Supported by her own company, she will present the "Ace of Trumps," a strongly dramatic sketch founded on "Forget Me Not," as originally played by her at Wallack's theater. Among the numerous features of the week's entertainment are Kelly and Violette, who are said to have one of the most handsomely costumed singing acts in vaudeville.

AVENUE—Rose Coghlan.

Those who like genuine fun will find a source of amusement in Joe Flynn, the irrepressible humorist, who has an apparently inexhaustible fund of jest and story. Another of the many features will be Harry Davenport, who has evidently inherited histrionic talent from his father, the lamented E. L. Davenport, one of the most talented Thespians of his day. Harry Davenport, who is also a brother of the late Fanny Davenport, a prime favorite in this city in her time, has a talking and singing act that is said to be not only novel but amusing. Then there are Murphy and Francis, who will entertain with their specialty in which terpsichorean and vocal efforts are harmoniously blended. There will be 15 acts of this high-class character.

BIJOU—"The Bowery After Dark."

"The Bowery After Dark," with Terry McGovern as the Bowery boy, will be the attraction at the Bijou this week, opening with a bargain matinee tomorrow. It depicts the pleasures, misery and crime on the Bowery at midnight, when all the city is asleep and the Bowery is in full blast. The production has been entirely rewritten since its last appearance here, and many new effects added. One of the strongest features is the engagement of Terry McGovern as the Bowery boy. In the Lenox Athletic club scene Terry will have a sensational three-round bout with the villain of the play, one of the most realistic boxing exhibitions ever seen on the stage. The story of the play is intensely interesting. The hero is engaged to be married to the heroine. He joins the Rough Riders and goes to Cuba. During the war a false friend forges a letter to the hero's fiancee and later on marries her. He is a gambler, smuggler and a villain, and is associated with the Chinese who deal in opium. He misuses and disgraces his wife. The hero returns from Cuba and finds his old love in a Bowery resort pleading with her husband to return to her. He insults her. The hero takes her part, and, with the help of Terry McGovern, rescues her.

Stage News and Notes.

The Avenue will close its season on July 2. A few bookings made for the following week have been canceled. The attendance has been encouraging despite the warm weather. The Bijou continues to be well patronized and will be kept open indefinitely.

Owing to the great hit made by Sadie and Harry Fields, who played the comedy roles in "The Road to Ruin," at the Bijou last week, they have been retained to assume the comedy roles, with new songs, new jokes and an entirely new act, in "The Bowery After Dark," which appears at the Bijou this week.

William Faversham will appear next season in Mr. Pinero's latest play, "Letty." Mrs. Faversham (Miss Julie Opp), will have the leading woman's role. Mr. Pinero is working on a new play in Tunbridge Wells, England.

Radium promises to be the rage. There will be a radium ballet at Cleveland's theater this week, and the Garrick people hope to be able to introduce one into "The Maid and the Mummy." The same feature was to have been presented in a Chicago theater, but the municipality decided that it would infringe on the fire restrictions, and it was withdrawn.

Mrs. Fiske will begin her season at the Manhattan theater September 15 with "Hedda Gabler." She has engaged George Arliss for the stock company she intends to install at the Manhattan.

Several stars have been trying recently to describe their sensations on a metropolitan "first-night."

"It is like being run over by a locomotive," said Maxine Elliott.

"It is like being torn limb from limb," Virginia Harned says.

"I never eat anything but soup that day," says Wilton Lackaye sententiously. "It's no use."

In the New York Theaters.

By GEORGE C. JENKS.

NEW YORK, June 25.—Mystery on mystery grows at the roof-garden. We have the "Mysterious Face" at Hammerstein's and now the New York roof tries to put it out of countenance by bringing forward "Datas," the man with a phenomenal memory. He is certainly a wonder in his way. I do not think he will become as popular as the "Face," because his feats are purely mental, and the average roof-gardener does not want to think too hard while taking his amusement. Datas tells you the dates of every happening which you can think since the beginning of the world. He knows when each king and queen of England came to the throne, when they died, and how old they were at certain periods of their reigns. He knows how many men there were in each of the regiments in the American civil war, and he can tell you a lot of things about other armies that you never knew before.

All this is remarkable, but is it amusing? That is the question which naturally will be asked, and some of the habitues of roof gardens who have heard Datas rattling off dry statistics by the yard are disposed to shrug their shoulders. Still, there are many people who keenly enjoy such feats. It gives them an intellectual pleasure incomparably more satisfying to them than the ordinary individual will derive from a "Pony ballet" or a topical song and chorus. Most of us like to be perplexed when it does not cost us anything but the price of admission, and thus Datas has a part to fill in the summer diversion of New York that is large enough to be imposing.

There is nothing mystic in his appearance. He strolls out from the wings with both hands in the pockets of his eminently respectable trousers and his fancy vest looks like that of a prosperous song-and-dance man. He talks with a slightly British accent, and he smiles occasionally when some one passes him up a particularly hard nut. Then he cracks it with one champ of his jaws and waits for another. Altogether, Datas is original, and for that reason among others he is well worth seeing and hearing.

"Hedda Gabler" was given at the West End theater on Thursday and Friday afternoon this week in a very creditable manner. Una Abell-Brinker, who has made herself beloved as leading woman in one of the stock companies for a year, played the name part, and did it with a precision and intellectual comprehension of the role which was worthy of the applause it drew forth. It was something of a bold move to present Ibsen to West End theater patrons. They have not been used to the works of the great Norwegian, and it was by no means certain that they would accept them with that avidity always to be desired at a performance given mainly for art's sake. But they took to him very kindly. One thing was that they saw in Miss Abell-Brinker an old favorite, and were prepared to enjoy her work, no matter whom her author might be. Max Figman, formerly stage manager for Mrs. Fiske, staged the production, and his experience with "Hedda Gabler" at the Manhattan theater stood him in good stead when he put it on at the West End. He played Brack. So good an actor as he is could not do it in anything less than perfect style.

BIJOU—Clara M. Lengley.

The Weber-Ziegfeld company will occupy the old Weber and Fields music hall. The Ziegfeld is "Flo," Anna Held's husband, and the dainty Parisienne herself will be the prima donna. It is understood that her salary will be larger than any ever paid in the old Weber-Fields company, as is only meet and proper, considering that "Flo" will be a partner in the enterprise with Joe Weber. An important engagement is that of Harry Morris, so familiar to Harry Williams' patrons in Pittsburgh as the ponderous Dutchman with the fearful and wonderful broken dialogue. Harry Morris is naturally funny, and as he will be placed in scenes with Weber, we may have something like the old Weber and Fields fun again. Aubrey Boucicault will be the leading man, to do "straight" juvenile parts, such as were filled by Charles Ross in the old days.

De Wolf Hopper and his company are doing "Wang" at the Manhattan Beach theater, and repeating their success at the Lyric. The production is a fine one, and, impregnated with sea air, is a capital thing for that tired feeling which comes with the approach of the dog days.

"The Yankee Consul," at the Broadway, "The Dictator," at the Criterion, and "Piff, Paff, Pouf," at the Casino, are all going along steadily, with large audiences all the time, and no prospect of any stopping at present.

John G. Duss is breaking his record for large attendance at the Madison Square garden, where his "Venice" and band concerts are pleasing his friends, old and new. Mr. Duss is recognized now as one of the musicians of his day, regardless of his having come from Economy, and of his being advertised at first as having an Economy band. His players are not from Economy now in particular. Some of them, who are up to the standard of merit he requires, are still with him, but he picks his men from all over the civilized world, and he has an aggregation that have never been excelled by Sousa or any other great band leader.

"The Southerners," George W. Lederer's successful musical comedy, at the New York, will be withdrawn tonight, for a month's rest. It will reopen in August in the same theater. It has made its raison d'etre, but the management think it would be well to shut it off in the hottest of the hot weather.

The roof garden on Madison Square garden will open next Saturday. It will represent Japan, and there will be many kinds of amusement up there. With Venice below and Japan above, there should be diversity of national characteristics enough to suit anyone.

"Dreamland" and "Luna park" are both attracting large numbers of amusement seekers at Coney Island.

By JOHN O. BAGLIN.

THE stock market during Republican convention week very much resembled that of 1900. An effort to stimulate a "convention rise" was apparently made, just as it was four years ago, but it did not make much progress, although it is generally conceded that Wall street sentiment was more cheerful during the week just closed than for some time past. One reason why the general character of the market was much the same as in 1900 is that the Philadelphia and Chicago conventions were much the same. In both conventions there was no doubt about the head of the ticket or the general tenor of the platform, and the temporary doubt about the candidate for the vice presidency was soon removed and followed by a nomination by acclamation. Wall street manifested no interest whatever in the proceedings at Chicago during the past week, and if the presidential campaign of 1904 has any effect upon business and speculation it will come from the developments of the Democratic convention to be held next month. Immediately following the opening of the campaign of 1900 there was much hesitation in the stock market and a declining tendency to values, which was due almost exclusively to the unfavorable condition of the crops. So far as wheat was concerned these conditions continued unfavorable right up to the close of the harvest, the average for both winter and spring wheat at the close of the season being 69.6 per cent, the lowest on record, and the total yield being 522,000,000 bushels, the smallest for four years. However, the yield of corn, our great money crop, exceeded 2,000,000,000 bushels, and the yield of oats was the largest ever harvested. There was also in the summer and fall of 1900 a reactionary tendency in industrial circles. Our production of pig iron had fallen below 9,000,000 tons in 1896, and had leaped to 13,600,000 tons in 1899. There was the usual talk in 1900, therefore, that high tide had been reached, and that the country was due for another reaction in the iron trade. This view was strengthened by the fact that as a result of the removal of the free silver incubus and a restoration of the tariff policy, the pent-up business of four years broke loose in a flood of prosperity, and this condition of actual business and public sentiment was seized upon by the promoters to float an enormous amount of new securities. But the forebodings of the midsummer period of 1900 were not realized, and immediately after the elections of that year business and speculation took on new life and expanded into the unprecedented boom of 1901-1902.

O ⊙ O

Anyone who has had the opportunity for obtaining the views of persons in a position to read the future must have been struck with the confident expressions regarding the business outlook for next year. A local manufacturer, whose opinion on the iron trade is regarded as second to none in the United Staes, this past week stated that he believed 1905 would witness a recovery to the largest volume of iron and steel production in the history of the country. He said that the present lull in the trade had been expected, and that the industry was now so well organized that supply could easily be regulated to meet demand, so that there would be no large accumulation of stocks to work off when the turn comes. Expressions of opinion like these were no doubt responsible for the strength of U. S. Steel preferred and the sinking fund bonds during the past week. This strength was in the face of a further curtailment in the output of pig iron and in the face of predictions that by July 1 the producing capacity of the northern furnaces will be cut down to 50 per cent of the total capacity. Aside from the report of the placing of a few comparatively small orders for steel rails, and of prospective orders for structural material, the iron market situation and outlook were less favorable than a month ago, when Steel preferred was selling 4 per cent below the average price for the past week. The recovery in the stock, despite surface indications of poor trade, is therefore regarded as quite significant. In fact, the strength of the stock was the real sustaining factor in the general market. The announcement that at the forthcoming meeting of the steel-rail makers the present price of $28 a ton would be maintained for 1905 contracts also indicates faith on the part of manufacturers that consumers are merely holding back their orders. Another indication as to the feeling regarding the future is the extreme ease in time money. On acceptable collateral loans may be obtained in New York at 3 to 4 per cent running over into next year.

O ⊙ O

While Steel preferred has been advancing the question as to the ability of the corporation to earn the full quarter's dividend on the stock has been temporarily dropped. It is likely to become a live question again next month, however, when the reports of pig iron production and stocks will be made. At the corresponding date last year action on the dividend was taken at a meeting held the first Tuesday in July. This year action will be deferred until the last Tuesday in July, the board having changed the date fo. holding regular meetings in order to have more accurate returns as a guide for action. For the April dividend the corporation was compelled to draw upon its surplus to the extent of nearly $2,000,000, and it was justified in this action by the encouraging prospects for trade. Almost immediately after the declaration of that dividend, however, a sharp reaction occurred in business and that reaction is still in progress. A minimum estimate of requirements for fixed charges, depreciation, sinking funds and 1¾ per cent on the preferred stock approximates $15,000,000 per quarter. Of course, there is no fixed amount or percentage charged off for depreciation, but the estimate of $15,000,000 is based upon the average that has been charged off in previous quarters. There is no way of even approximating the net earnings for the current quarter, but some unofficial guesses have been made, the maximum placing the amount at $19,000,000 and the minimum at $17,000,000. For the corresponding quarter last year the earnings were $36,642,308, and three months after those figures were made public the directors cut the dividend on the common stock in two, subsequently passing it entirely. For the June quarter in 1902 the earnings were $37,662,058. It was in this quarter when earnings reached their maximum that the board of directors proposed the bond conversion scheme, and in the circular setting forth the desirability of the plan it was stated that $25,000,000 new cash would be required for immediate expenditure on improvements, which would effect an annual saving of $10,000,000, and that $25,000,000 more new cash would be required to carry out plans for the economical operation of the plant. The finance committee therefore recommended the raising of $50,000,000 new cash by the sale of $50,000,000 sinking fund bonds at par in addition to the bonds that were issued for exchange in preferred stock. As everybody knows, that bit of financiering was a failure, only $20,000,000 bonds being issued for cash, on which an enormous commission was paid, so that the net amount of new cash raised was comparatively insignificant. If the corporation was in need of so much cash necessary to the economical operation of the plant at a time when its net earnings were exceeding $37,000,000 a quarter, the wisdom of drawing upon surplus earnings for dividends at a time when net earnings are at the rate of less than $20,000,000 per quarter may be fairly questioned. This is the view which a few conservative local financiers are expressing when discussing next month's dividend prospects.

O ⊙ O

There was one incident of the week that had a chilling effect upon bullish enthusiasm. This was the action of the Wabash directors in passing the interest on the debenture "A" bonds. These bonds, it is said, are largely held by insiders, and the general public does not directly suffer as a consequence. Still the action is difficult to reconcile with known facts. In the first place, the statement of the company for May showed an increase in net earnings of $23,000, and yet last year and for nine years previous to that, when earnings were smaller, the interest was regularly paid on these debentures. In fact, the interest was paid in such years as 1893 and 1896, when the business of the country was prostrated. That it should be passed now when the amount involved is only $105,000 suggests some ulterior object, or that railroad conditions and outlook are less favorable than appear on the surface. The action was followed by a slump in Wabash securities, and for a time on Friday the general market weakened in sympathy, but later under the leadership of the Harriman stocks, particularly Union Pacific, the market, with the exception of the Wabash issues, recovered and closed strong. Incidents like these are responsible for the lack of public confidence in the market, and accounts for the tendency which is becoming more pronounced among investors to seek the highest grade of bonds in preference to what are classed as standard dividend-paying stocks, even though the prices of the latter are comparatively low. Another incident of the week was the statement of the Baltimore & Ohio for May. Gross earnings fell off $478,000 for the month, while expenses increased $278,000, the loss in net earnings for the month being no less than $757,000. For the 11 months of the fiscal year the gross earnings have increased more than $2,000,000, while the expenses have increased nearly $4,000,000, the net falling off $1,915,000. These figures convey the impression that bookkeeping must have had something to do with the unusually favorable showing made last year and the year before when the company was raising new capital. This is another thing which makes the public suspicious and raises doubt as to the wisdom of issuing new capital for the acquisition of shares in competing lines. There is also the natural inference of extravagance in expenditures when with the use of additional capital net results become less favorable.

NOW FOR THE SUMMER CAMPAIGN

The Editor's Point of View

TO THOSE of our readers who are especially interested in planning new and tempting dishes for the delectation of their families, the editor would commend an article in the present issue on English Cooking. This article may be found on page 10 of the present issue. It was written by a young American matron who has had two years' residence in England, and by making many English friends was enabled to observe the ways of the English household, and the cuisine. The present article will be followed by another on "Sweets," taking up the making of desserts and confections most popular in England. One hears the cry so often "What shall I have for dinner today?" and any housekeeper will tell you that to furnish good food in pleasing variety is an art in itself. These articles, therefore, will be found very useful help in solving the problem of "What to eat." Every nation possesses certain individualities of cookery which are interesting as well as valuable. For some foreign dishes our tastes must be educated, but many of them we find delicious upon first trial and thereafter give them an honored place on our tables. That this is true the popularity of the foreign restaurants in our cities testifies. In almost any family Hungarian goulash, spaghetti a l'Italian, potatoes Parisienne, Kaffee kuchen from Germany, Russian salads, even the Chinese chop suey are enjoyed and we do not think it strange to put these on our tables with our own corn bread and pumpkin pie. One of the most treasured recipes is for the old English plum pudding, such a recipe often being handed down for generations in a family. The English cookery of today possesses many hints for her who is willing to learn.

I DON'T think its much of a compliment to be told "Just come to dinner at any time. I never go to any extra preparation for visitors" declared one woman who is a welcome guest wherever she goes. In a way she is right. One always feels gratified if one's hostess remembers a favorite dish and makes a point of preparing it and no woman but appreciates the compliment of some extra appointments on the table. Taking pot-luck may be all very well in those households where the mistress is conscious of ever faultless dining room appointments and delicious cooking, but when taking pot-luck means sitting at the place where one of the children spilled syrup at breakfast, and partaking of milk and crackers—better stay at home. We have all heard of that amiable lady who entertained distinguished visitors with her brilliant conversation so well that they did not know what was served for luncheon, she having been taken unawares with a repast of toast and tea and nothing else, but unfortunately, brilliant conversationalists are the exception rather than the rule. And I never could see the sense in keeping silence at one's own table when the food was badly cooked. Surely you do not want the visitor to carry away an impression that you are so ignorant or so careless as not to recognize the defects of a dish. A few words of explanation or apology—although they be only few—are just as correct under such circumstances as they would have been had your visitor sat on a chair which broke under her and precipitated her on the floor. When one has a meal already prepared and a guest comes in, then there is nothing to be done, unless the store room can yield up some delicious preserve, or a supply of long kept fruit cake; but when a guest is invited, by all means show that you honor the coming by some preparation. There is a golden mean in hospitality as in all else, and blessed, indeed, is she who has found it.

RECENTLY the editor of this column heard the remark "I will not go to see Mrs. So-and-so again, for she always either gives me something, or keeps me to dinner or luncheon, and as I have no way of returning her favors I think I ought not to receive any more of them." It is true that the speaker was poor in this world's goods. She had no home in which she might dispense hospitality. But she had made the mistake of many others, thinking that since she had neither money nor a home, she had nothing worth giving. On the contrary, she had a great deal. No matter how poor any woman may be she can still give pleasant companionship, sympathetic attention, and small acts of kindness and thoughtfulness which can never be bought for a price. It takes a greater spirit to receive, in many instances, than it does to give, that is, when we consider only material things. Many a sensitive person is distressed by gifts which require thereafter a constantly expressed gratitude. Sometimes these gifts cannot be declined, because the giver is a relative or a close friend of some member of the family. The sting of expected gratitude goes with the gifts, and real gratitude vanishes in a twinkling. No one can be blamed for declining gifts given in this manner. But when a gift must be declined simply because the recipient cannot make a similar return, then wholesome self-respect is degenerated into pettiness of spirit. If Mary can give you a drive in her carriage or a place at her table, or even a pretty shirtwaist, and you can give Mary an afternoon of forgetfulness of her trials with her children, simply by your cheerfulness and jollity, you have made a fair exchange. If you are witty, clever and entertaining, by no means spare your gifts of these qualities to your friends. They will be stimulated and gratified by your society, and will like you much better than if you could give them the dull dinners they give to you. There is no one, no one, so poor as to have nothing to give.

A T last daughter is home from college and though you are loath to confess it, you, as her mother, are disappointed in her. She seems to have grown away from her home and its ways. Her talk is all of girls whom you do not know, of classes, and college festivities, of teachers and friends who are no more than names to you. She is inclined to be critical and makes remarks about the furniture, the table, even your gowns, which hurt bitterly, even though she is your daughter. She is discontented with the old life. And you are at a loss as to what is to be done. Daughter does not want to go calling with you, or join in the simpler pleasures of home life. But do not take the situation too seriously. And above all things do not harass her with showing her what you consider her "plain duty." She loves you just as much, but she is young and has been away from you for four years during a great formative period of her life. She has grown up, and with her growing she has been brought in contact with certain new conditions which have had great influences on her. Although she seems very self-assured, very confident of herself and her abilities, she has only not gone far enough to realize how little she knows. She must be led by affection, and led with tact and gentleness. If she wants to make changes in the home life, so far as they are possible, permit her to do so. It will give her occupation, and possibly the new ideas she brings out will mean something to you, too. Get her to help you in the house as a favor, and accept some of her plans, yes even give her the leadership if you can, and she will soon begin to see wherein she is lacking and come to you for advice. Let her see that you feel she has come to years of discretion, and you can trust her much further than if you treat her as a child. Be at once companion and friend. Mother and daughter too often drift apart by reason of the former's want of tact, and the latter's impatience of restraint. Life is too long to make a mistake like this. There is a recognized duty on both sides, but to be successful it must be pleasure as well.

PRIVACY in one's own home is too often a minus quantity. One may bar out friends by the simple legend "Not at Home," but to hide from the curiosity of the members of one's own family is a problem indeed. "Who's your letter from?" "What's in that package?" "Where are you going?" All these questions are apparently privileged when a member of the family desires information. Sisters seldom or never think of knocking at the door when entering each other's rooms. It is apparently perfectly permissible to rummage through the dresser or the wardrobe of another member of the family, and wear any article of clothing which strikes the fancy. When members of a family are united by sympathy and feeling, such common ownership of clothing and small possessions is no annoyance. Yet in so many cases sisters will be utterly dissimilar in every way, and naturally antagonistic, from earliest childhood. Then this indiscriminate borrowing comes to be a great source of squabbles, and should be stopped at once. Parents should teach their children early in life that the belongings of another are sacred, whether the other person is a relative or an entire stranger. There are few things so essentially irritating as to have one's sister appear with a cherished pair of gloves or a treasured handkerchief just after you have boarded a car and it is too late to demand a restitution of the articles to their place. And one of the disagreeables of being a niece is to have Aunty come for a visit and blandly appear at breakfast in your very best pink silk dressing jacket which is never worn save for days of semi-invalidism, and is the pride and glory of your negligee wardrobe. She might have asked, at least, you angrily think, and thereafter, your behavior toward Aunty becomes a trifle acidulated. Relatives are only "forced acquaintances" forced on us by accident of birth, and not of our own choosing. No wonder there is such a wide difference observable in members of the same household. Since we would observe the rights or a stranger to her own bedroom when she wishes to retire therin and read, write letters or sleep, and since we would not wear her clothes, or go through her dresser drawer when we are curious as to her belongings, let us by all means accord the same courtesies to our relatives. This promiscuous and uncalled for familiarity with the private affairs of the family is too oftn the outgrowth of curiosity and not of solicitude. Many a domestic trouble might have been avoided had the members of the family respected each other's private affairs.

IT IS astonishing what an invaluable addition to the house the veranda becomes in summer. One always feels sorry for the family who must live in a house without a veranda, and the unroofed verandas are little better than none. In no country has the architecture taken on a more pronounced tendency to consider comfort in summer, than it has in America. The old-time porticos of the south have figured in song and story, and the very mention of them calls up visions of climbing roses, and sweet jasmine and ivy, and white gowned ladies seated in lounging chairs. The porch today has become an additional room for summer use, and it is well used. The furnishings need not be elaborate, though they should be comfortable; and right here is registered a firm protest against the knobby knotty chairs which many dealers would have us believe are "Porch chairs" par excellence. A coarse rug of cocoa fibre, or matting, if one can afford nothing better, should cover the floor, and there should be adjustable hanging screens should the porch be unshaded by trees. Awnings may be added if the sun intrudes very unpleasantly at any time during the day. Then a few comfortable chairs with cushions which are to be used, and not looked at, a light stand or table to hold the books or work bag or ice water pitcher, and the furnishing is complete. If there are small children in the family a big soft rug is a valuable addition, since the wee ones cannot sit in chairs, and the matting is rather hard for their tender bodies. Hanging baskets of flowers, or long boxes filled with ferns and flowers add unmeasurably to the effect of the veranda, and a big wood or rattan swing hung very securely, or a hammock will prove a joy, indeed, not only to the children, but to the grown-ups. We should get the habit of living out of doors as much as possible. Too much fresh air was never heard of. The porch is a great help in this outdoor living.

EDITOR'S NOTE—It is with great pleasure that we notice that interest in this department continues, and as heretofore we will be glad to have letters from anyone who has useful information to impart. These letters will all be published even though it may be some weeks after receipt. Such a number of communications are received for this department weekly that it is impossible to publish them at once. Letters are published in regular rotation, those first received having the first attention given them.

The object of the Housewives' Reciprocity Bureau remains the same, to form an "open congress" for all housewives who could not otherwise meet and exchange views. The letter which seems best and most useful will receive $2.00, and second best $1.00.

Contributors will confer a favor by looking over all letters carefully before sending, as several times omissions have ocurred which rendered the subject matter of the letter valueless. The conditions remain as stated.

Letters must not recommend any particular brand of canned food, soap or other purchaseable household supplies.

Letters must not contain more than 300 words.

Letters must be written only on one side of the paper.

Letters will be received and considered at any time.

The Pittsburgh Gazette reserves for itself the right to publish any letter, whether or not it is a prize winner, with no payment to the contributor.

There is no limit placed to the number of times one person may compete.

All letters must be addressed to the Housewives' Reciprocity Bureau, Home Journal Section, The Pittsburgh Gazette.

Failure to comply with any of the above conditions rules the letter out of the contest.

THE first requirement in cooking vegetables is to have them fresh. Cook summer vegetables the same day gathered. Look them over, discarding all decayed or unripe parts. Lay in cold water some time before cooking. Most vegetables should be put on in boiling water, which should be kept boiling until they are done. Place cabbage, cauliflower, spinach in salted water for an hour before cooking to remove all worms and insects that infest these plants. Green peas, asparagus, string beans and spinach should not be covered while cooking, as it destroys their color. The time allowed for cooking vegetables is important. Potatoes require about 30 minutes. They are in their prime cooked in their jackets. When peeled take as thin a paring as possible. Never serve boiled potatoes in a covered dish. It makes them watery. Boil parsnips from 20 to 30 minutes, turnips from 40 minutes to an hour, beets one to two hours. Onions are best boiled in two or three waters. String beans should be boiled about an hour and a half, shell beans an hour. Green corn requires 20 minutes. Boil cabbage from one to two hours in plenty of water. Tomatoes should be cooked 30 minutes. Use an enameled saucepan; an iron vessel or rusty pan impairs the flavor and color of the vegetable. Cook cauliflower about 20 minutes. It is whiter if cooked in part milk. The different ways of preparing and serving vegetables can be learned easily enough, once a few general rules are learned and observed they may be combined in a way to add to the variety that is the "sice of life" and gives zest to the jaded appetite.

AS I am greatly interested in the Housewives' Reciprocity Bureau, I beg leave to add my mite to your columns.

Strawberry tapioca—One cup of tapioca soaked over night in water, in the morning wash and cook; when done add one well-beaten egg, put in saucepan; wash and pick one box of strawberries and put over the tapioca, add enough sugar to sweeten to suit the taste—bake in a moderate oven 20 to 30 minutes.

Strawberry shortcake—one cup sugar, one cup of milk, two eggs, 1 tablespoonful of butter, 2 teaspoonfuls of baking powder, flour to make a nice batter. Bake in two layers. Take one box strawberries, wash and drain, mash in a dish and add one cup of sugar. When ready place berries on layers and serve with cream.

Snow balls—one cup of sugar, one-half cup butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, one and one-half cups flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, whites of three eggs beaten stiff. Bake in deep square tins. The day following cut into squares, frost on all sides and roll in cocoanut.

MRS. S. E. P., Mineral Point, Pa.

AM interested in your page of recipes and wish to contribute.

Hamburg loaf—Strain one can of tomatoes, take one pound of ground steak, one cup cracker crumbs, one egg, three tablespoonfuls of strained tomatoes season well with salt, pepper and parsley if you like it. Mix well and form into loaf, put rest of strained tomatoes around it and bake in oven little over half hour. Can be served hot with tomato sauce, sliced cold or sliced very thin makes an excellent sandwich filling.

To make tough chicken tender—Cut up the chicken as for frying, put in saucepan, cover with water, season and stew first one and one-half hours, after which pour off part of the broth (to make the gravy), and add a little more water, pinch of baking soda, three tablespoonfuls vinegar, cook about an hour and a half longer, lift chicken, roll in flour and fry. You will find it as tender as young chicken, with no taste of the vinegar in it.

Have tried many times with great success.

MISS P. S., East Liverpool, Ohio.

THREE good old German dishes—Raw potato pancakes—Pare and grate eight large potatoes, cut in an onion, beat in four eggs, add a teaspoonful of salt, mix with two tablespoonfuls of flour a teaspoonful of baking powder, add and mix well; fry in a hot skillet.

Potato dumplings—Boil quarter peck of potatoes, pare and let get cold; grate and mix in one egg, teaspoonful salt, mix with half a pound of flour a teaspoonful of baking soda and add; cut in dice one slice of bread, brown in butter; roll mixed potatoes in balls, place in center one or two pieces of browned bread, drop in boiling water, let boil until they begin to float. Serve with any kind of meat gravy.

Sour meat—Cut in small pieces one pound of cold or left-over beef, cut in one onion, half cup of raisins, salt and pepper to taste. Brown in skillet two level tablespoonfuls of flour; when brown move from stove and add enough water to make a nice gravy; add your mixed meat and a half cup of syrup and half cup of vinegar.

Picnic or lunch sandwiches—Take two cans of potted ham, make a dressing of one egg, a teaspoonful of butter, a tablespoonful of cream, a tablespoonful sugar, salt and pepper to taste. Dissolve in half cup of vinegar a teaspoonful mustard, put on dressing to boil, when hot add your vinegar, let boil till thick. Mix with potted ham and spread with a salad leaf between thin sliced bread. MRS. E. S. J., Pittsburgh.

I HAVE been looking for some time in different recipe books for an easy way to make elderberry wine, but failed to procure the desired information. I find recipes for the boiling process, but there is a recipe in which the wine is made with less trouble. I am sorry to say that I lost the recipe some years ago.

Will you kindly assist me to procure the above?

MRS. A. L., Pittsburgh, Pa.

I THINK the Housewives' Reciprocity Bureau quite an addition to your good paper. I will give a few home recipes:

My mother's veal pie—About one pound of veal cut in small pieces, stew until tender, add a little butter and salt; make a soft biscuit dough, use plenty of shortening. Roll out a layer of dough and put in shallow baking pan. Place here and there a bit of the veal, then lay a layer of thinly-sliced potatoes, pepper and salt. Add more veal and potatoes, pepper and salt and small bits of butter over top. Cover with upper crust, leaving opening in center of dough to pour in boiling water the veal was stewed in. Bake until potatoes are soft and dough a nice brown.

Soft gingerbread—One cup of molasses, ½ cup brown sugar, ½ cup butter, one egg beaten white added last, 2-3 cup sour milk. Spice to taste. Flour to make batter slightly stiffer than cake batter. If the tea steeper contains any cold tea-soaked leaves do not throw away, pour into the cut glass water bottles, shake well, then rinse in cold water. The inside of the bottle will remain bright and clear. Equal parts of milk and water applied with a small sponge will make the leaves of a palm or rubber plant look like wax and prevent them from turning brown. C. A. MacM., Latrobe, Pa.

HOUSECLEANING time now being over, the next thing in order is canning and putting away of fruit, and thinking a few suggestions may benefit some of the readers of the Housewives' Reciprocity Bureau, will offer the following:

When canning fruit of any kind always have the jars full, and before sealing add a few drops of cold water, which will cause the fruit to settle, and then if properly sealed will keep nicely for several seasons. To prevent tomatoes canned in glass jars from spoiling, wrap jars in paper and keep in a very dark place. One lemon added to a gallon of tomato preserves will impart a most delicious flavor; cut the lemon in small pieces and add to preserves about 15 minutes before removing from the fire. Equal parts of currants and red raspberries make a fine jelly. Equal parts of pineapple and strawberries are good preserves. After filling jars and before putting away they should be tested again and tightened. You will be surprised how much more they can be tightened after contents have become cold.

A good use for the many paper bags received from your groceries is to place your jars of fruit in them and label contents on outside, thereby finding at once the fruit wanted and also keeping jars nice and clean. By saving bags the entire year and putting same away until needed, you will have one for each jar.

Have you ever thought what a good book of useful information and tested recipes one can have by saving all those published in the Housewives' Reciprocity Bureau and pasting same in an old book of some kind?

MRS. A. F. O., Akron, O.

A FURNITURE POLISH—1-3 turpentine, 1-3 olive oil, 1-3 vinegar. For hardwood floors apply with a soft cloth kerosene or petroleum. A little turpentine in hot water will remove moths from the carpet. Salt on egg spoon will keep silver from tarnishing. Pearl, bone, wooden or celluloid handles should not be put in water. If fresh ink spots boiling milk will remove them. If fruit stains do not take boiling water, take salfor. I hope these hints will help others as they helped me. MISS R. O., Sewickley, Pa.

I WISH to inform the readers of The Gazette that the use of soap gives either solid or plated silver a leaden appearance. When articles are tarnished rub them with a little whiting wet with water, and polish with a piece of soft chamois. The discoloration of egg on silver spoons or forks may be removed by washing them in the water in which a potato has been boiled. Potato water with a little salt in it should always be saved and articles washed in it with a woolen cloth, rinsed in clean water, and then polished with a chamois. The taste of fish may be removed from steel knives and forks by rubbing them with fresh lemon or orange peel. Often a knife with which onions have been cut will keep the odor in spite of scouring. Jab it in the damp earth a few times and it will be cleansed perfectly. When making bags to put away silverware always use the unbleached material. Sulphur is used for bleaching, and its influence will quickly tarnish silver. Kerosene oil will clean blackened silver almost instantly.

Soap for cleaning silver—One pound of common whiting, ¼ lb. castile soap; mix the whiting to a smooth paste with water and put on to boil. Shave the soap and dissolve in a cup of boiling water; add this to the above mixture and boil together to a smooth, thick paste; pour into an earthen dish and when cold it will be ready for use. This will last a year. Apply with a soft cloth and always wash silver with hot soapsuds. Silver cleaned with this keeps brighter longer than any powder I have ever used. MRS. E. K., Allegheny, Pa.

I HAVE found the application of a light coat of white paint to the outside of screen doors and window screens an excellent preventive from seeing in from the outside.

I have used the following recipes and they have always proved satisfactory: For cleaning the hair and scalp—Make a mixture of 1 pint soft water, 1 oz. sal soda, ¼ oz. cream tartar. Apply thoroughly to the hair and scalp.

To keep fresh meat for a week or two in the summer, by farmers or others who live a distance from butchers, can keep it fresh and sweet by putting it in sour milk or buttermilk and keep in a cool cellar. The bone or fat does not need to be removed. Rinse well when used.

A substitute for cream—Take two or three whole eggs, beat them well in a large dish, then pour boiling hot tea over them; pour gradually to prevent curdling. It is difficult for the taste to distinguish it from rich cream.

MRS. A. J. G., Scottdale, Pa.

HAVE had great praise for fried chicken. Cut up and wash thoroughly a young chicken, let drain; have ready in a deep vessel not less than a pound of lard. When smoking hot drop in each piece lightly, turn and keep boiling fast until done, which you can tell by trying with a fork. Season to taste. When done pour off the lard into a jar or can to be used again. Put a large tablespoonful of butter into the vessel, let brown nicely, take the chicken out on a dish and then stir in a tablespoonful of flour in the hot butter left in the vessel. Stir until the flour is well cooked, season the gravy and then take half a pint or more of milk and water, half and half, and stir in it. It should look like rich cream. Pour over the chicken and serve with a few sprigs of parsley. The same rule applies to frying all meats. Lamb chops and cutlets absorb very little lard when cooked by this method, for the lard is kept smoking hot all the time. Two or three minutes will cook a chop in hot lard, and the same lard can be used several times if strained through cheesecloth.

To cook an old chicken tender, truss well, then season and wrap entirely in brown paper. The sheet must be large enough to cover it twice. Tie it around with twine, dampen the paper, let the oven be hot and let cook one hour and a half. Then take the paper off and let it brown, and baste and turn often until well brown.

Drop biscuits—Two cups flour, 1 tablespoon of lard and butter mixed, saltspoon of salt, teaspoon of baking powder. Rub the lard and butter well into the flour, add 1 tablespoonful of sugar, stir in 1 cup milk with a spoon. It should be the stiffest kind of batter or the softest kind of dough. Take the paste on the end of a spoon and drop it in little mounds on a greased pan. Fifteen minutes to make and bake. The same recipe makes delicious corn bread by using a cup and a half of cornmeal and half cup flour. C. C., Pittsburgh.

POTPOURRI—Put a pint of alcohol into a gallon stone jar having a tightly-fitting cover, then as the fruits come on put them into the alcohol with an equal amount of sugar. Stir every day with a clean wooden spoon. Use strawberries, pineapples, raspberries, currants, grapes, blackberries, cherries, peaches and plums. Plums and peaches should be peeled, stoned and cut fine. Stone the cherries and seed the grapes. One month after putting in the last fruit it will be ready for use.

To clean gas globes—Dissolve one tablespoonful turpentine in two quarts of hot water. To clean linoleum take equal parts of cottonseed oil and sharp vinegar. If linoleum is very dirty first wash in soap and water, or water to which a little turpentine has been added.

In arranging the furniture after the spring cleaning be careful to place pieces having mirrors where the sun will not shine on them, as sunshine is ruinous to mirrors, clouding them beyond reparation. MRS. J. M. L., Wilkinsburg, Pa.

ORANGE OMELET—Beat the yolks of six eggs until creamy. Add six tablespoonfuls of orange juice, six teaspoonfuls of powdered sugar and grated rind of two oranges. Beat the whites until stiff and cut into the yolks. Pour mixture into an omelet pan in which a teaspoonful of butter has been melted. When the under part becomes solid slit it slightly in three or four places with a knife, allowing any liquid on top to reach the pan and become firm. This will prevent the omelet from falling when lifted from the pan. When ready to serve dust the omelet with powdered sugar and fold.

To make a fancy dish do not slit the omelet with a knife, but when the bottom of the omelet is firm place the pan in a hot oven to dry the top. Then turn it out in its round shape on a hot platter, dredge thickly with powdered sugar and score in diagonal lines with a hot iron. This makes an attractive and appetizing dish for a luncheon.

E. S. B., Allegheny, Pa.

I HAVE been a reader of The Pittsburgh Gazette for years and am delighted with its aggressive spirit, also the courtesy extended to the ladies, giving them a journal in which to exchange practical ideas in housekeeping. I think it very helpful and have made numerous clippings. It is a good plan to have a scrap book mark in sections, spring, summer, autumn and winter, and paste or write seasonable recipes in their respective places. I send a few tried recipes:

Gingerbread—One cup shortening, ½ cup butter and sweet lard, 1 cup New Orleans molasses, 1 cup sour milk, 1 egg, ½ cup granulated sugar, 1 tablespoonful ginger, 1 teaspoonful cinnamon, ½ teaspoon ground cloves; sufficient flour to make a stiff batter, beat well; add last 1 scant teaspoonful soda dissolved in hot water. Bake 20 minutes in moderately hot oven. This will make two or three small sheets; dust with powdered sugar.

In the spring when the fruit closet has been depleted of its store, a good pie may be made as follows—One-half pt. cranberries, an equal quantity of seedless raisins cooked together about 15 minutes, when done add plenty of sugar, a little dredge of flour, and bake between crusts. Strawberries and gooseberries together make an excellent jam. A cup of sweet milk added to the water in which mush is made imparts a delicate flavor and browns more readily. A few potatoes may be baked nicely by placing a thin lid on a back burner on top the range and turning an old granite pudding pan over the potatoes which have been washed and dried. It saves heating the baker in hot weather. MRS. L. R. F., Akron, O.

I AM an interested reader of the Reciprocity Bureau and send you a few items. I have tried them and found them good. Hope they will benefit some of the readers.

Sprinkle the carpets with damp salt and let lay 5 or 10 minutes before sweeping. This will remove all the dust and make the carpet look bright and clean. This is better than anything I can find to bring colors to the surface of the carpet.

To keep patent leather shoes from cracking during cold weather, grease them well with vaseline before putting them away after wearing.

To make pies of sour milk—Beat together two eggs and a small teaspoonful of flour. Add about 1½ pints of sour milk (it can be thick), and beat thoroughly. Sweeten well and season with nutmeg, both to suit the taste. Bake without cover in quick oven. This is a very nice way to use up some of the sour milk. To those who live in rented houses a solution of lamp oil and cayenne pepper, about 2 tablespoonfuls of the pepper to a teacup full of oil. Apply with large feather or brush freely, having it come in contact with the bugs. This will kill them almost instantly, also will destroy the nits or eggs. This is better than lots of the insect powders purchased at stores, and very simple.

Hope this will find a place in your columns and not in the waste basket. MRS. A. P. C., Lazearville, W. Va.

The Winning of Miss Lucette

by Sallie Carroll

"IT'S A SHAME!" declared Mrs. Scott, as she snapped her scissors energetically into a piece of cross-barred muslin destined to become an apron for the minister's youngest girl. "There's old Col. Goldsborough has gone up to see Miss Lucette every Tuesday night of the world for twenty years, I guess, and would marry her any minute, only she's just so dead set against 'disregarding her dead sister's wishes.' Everybody knows Miss Henrietta was an cranky as the mischief and hated the colonel like poison. I believe Miss Lucette would give in and marry him, anyway, if she didn't feel so sure of him. Women are just that way; they never want what they can have, and besides, she's got so used to living there with Rose and Jinny and seeing the colonel every Tuesday night that I b'lieve she's forgotten how to change."

The Ladies' Aid Society of Greensboro gave vigorous assent to all of Mrs. Scott's assertions.

"You know," said Mrs. Massey, the president, a shrewd-looking, jolly little woman, "if Miss Lucette would just get jealous and could be made to believe that the colonel was making up to somebody else, why, my soul, they'd be married in three months. I tell you, gentle as she is, she's got plenty of the Carter spirit when she's roused up."

"Well, I don't know what she's going to do," said Mrs. Scott, "for Rose'll marry that young Dr. Southwick, sure's anything, and Miss Lucette will never consent to leave the old Carter property, and there she'll be with nobody but old black Jinny."

The other members of the Aid were all engaged in a heated debate as to whether or no the missionary in Africa really needed six flannel shirts, and Mrs. Massey drew her chair up close to Mrs. Scott and lowered her voice to confidential pitch.

"Minnie Scott," she whispered, impressively, "suppose you and me was to take hold and make this match. There's that Mrs. Ryly, she's a widow and a good 10 years younger than Miss Lucette, and she's real good-looking, and—"

"And she's got Col. Goldsborough to look after all her law business," broke in Mrs. Scott, excitedly. "It'll be a sort of special providence, Sara Massey, and we'll begin this very night. Oh, yes, Mrs. Jenkins, that goods will cut up and down, and if I was you I'd gore it a little at the top. It'll set better." In a whirl of brilliant green lawn the conspirators parted with whisper of seeing each other after the meeting.

Over at the Carter homestead on the outskirts of the town there was all the beauty of a Maryland midsummer day. The house, once the social center of the aristocracy of the Eastern Shore, was still in excellent condition. The builders of those old-time manors did not use sap shingles nor second-growth pine for foundation. From the kitchen came a jubilant refrain.

"De good Lawd He done set me free, Glory, glory, hallelu-u-u-jah."

But all else was still. There was a great old-fashioned garden on the south side sloping down to a stream (called by the natives "crick"), where yellow butterflies were pirouetting and fluttering through their aerial quadrilles. Trim edges of box bordered all the winding paths, and inside of these was a great wealth of all the dear old flowers that fashion does not recognize. Phlox, velvety sweet William, four-o'clocks, the flaunting ragged robin, bachelor's buttons, tall hollyhocks with a background of still taller sunflowers, patches of Johnny-jump-up and sweet alyssum, marigolds, the moss-like mountain pink, and one bed had held nothing but roses, red and white, yellow and pink—all blooming with the profusion which betokens loving attention. Farther on were roses of Sharon and honeysuckle, marking the turns in the path and growing amicably beside the humble lady-slipper and cockscomb. A fairy-like smoke tree stood over by the hedge, and brilliant, impudent tiger lilies swayed beside it. All was still save when some burly bumblebee hummed contentedly over his burden. Presently from among the herb beds came the snip-snip of scissors, and behold, Miss Lucette herself, to complete the picture.

The shadows were lengthening drowsily across the creek when a slim figure in white hastened down the garden path. "Aunty. Aunt Lucette, where are you?" called a fresh young voice.

"Here I am, Rose, cutting the lavender," replied Miss Lucette, turning to meet her niece. In her faintly purple gown, with the sharp, sweet perfume drifting around her, she looked the very spirit of the lavender. Her gray hair curled softly yet, and her cheeks were delicately flushed.

"Why, aunty," explained Rose, flushing in her turn, "Dr. Southwick is here and I would like, if you don't mind, to ask him to stay to tea. We'll play whist with you and the colonel if you'll just let him stay" (coaxingly, "and Jinny made sponge cake this morning and we have those nice big peaches, you know, and there's another glass of your lovely grape jelly."

Miss Lucette smiled mischievously. "Since you've planned it all so nicely, Rose, I think it would be a pity to disappoint you. Ask Dr. Southwick to stay, or wait, I will come in a few minutes and invite him, and Rose—as the girl turned gaily away—"you may get Great-grandmother Carter's china down, and tell Jinny to bring out the French lace centerpiece."

"I do not wish the young man to suppose that we are in any way impoverished," she thought, lifting her head a little proudly, "but he is a gentleman—that I know—and his family is above reproach." With which comforting reflection she cut the remaining heads of lavender and hastened to the house to extend her invitation, and then personally supervise the table appointments.

"Miss Lucette always seems to me a bit of delicate porcelain, a Dresden figure," said Edward Southwick as the little lady left the parlor, "while you are a flower personified, my Rose-of-the-World. Come sing for me, won't you, dear? Here's one I like, it has such a graceful little refrain."

Rose sat down at the piano and opened the song—it was "Celeste." The lilting sweetness of her flexible, lyric soprano reached Miss Lucette in the dining room.

"Of sweethearts I have had a score,
And time may bring as many more."

Miss Lucette half smiled at the words. "They used to call me the belle of the Eastern Shore," she thought, "and old Mr. Martin used to tease me by pretending that I refused an offer every day. How long ago it seems!"

Rose was singing the refrain:

"For little Cupid's never stupid,
As I've found out, as I've found out;
And love is truest when 'tis newest,
Beyond a doubt, beyond a doubt."

Miss Lucette's hand paused over a pile of white damask. "It's so," she murmured, "it's so! Where are they all now? All gone but Jack Goldsborough. 'Love is truest when 'tis newest—beyond a doubt.'"

"Was you speakin' to me, Miss Lucette?" queried Jinny, entering with the sponge cake.

"No," replied Miss Lucette, rousing herself with a sigh. "Get that openwork silver fruit dish for the peaches, Jinny."

It was a dainty table. The beaten biscuit (sure attribute to an Eastern Shore supper table) were creamy perfection, and the fragrant tea was a triumph to its maker. To the young doctor, just from hospital work in a sweltering city, the whole scene was perfect beyond words. The dining room overlooked the garden and the odor of the flowers without mingled with the scent of the roses on the table. Although it was scarcely dusk, Jinny lit the tapers in their massive silver holders, and the light fell kindly upon the three who sat about the table, brightening the faded charms of the gentle spinster, softening the brilliant flush of happiness on Rose's cheek, softening, too, the keen gray eyes and determined chin of the young man.

When they arose Miss Lucette begged that she might be excused. "For," she said, "there are a few little household duties to which I must attend."

"Well, aunty," said Rose, "I am going to take Dr. Southwick for a walk in the garden; there is such a lovely moon. But when the colonel comes and you are ready to play your rubber, just call us."

So Miss Lucette hastened to put away the silver, thence to her room to smoothe her hair and bathe her hands in rose water. As she came downstairs the old hall clock lacked by a few minutes of 8:30. Jinny, decked in white apron and gay bandana, was in waiting. Had she not done so every Tuesday night for over 20 years? Meeting the colonel's invariable query, "Is Miss Lucette at home?" with the same reply, "Yes, sah, Marse Gols'borough, walk right into de pa'lob, sah!" As the half hour struck she gave her cap and apron a final adjustment. The peal of the knocker was certain to come in a moment. In the parlor Miss Lucette had prepared the card table and given her gray curls a hasty pat—Sister Henrietta had so detested curls. Then she sat down in her accustomed place, the chair at the right of the fireplace. The candles winked at each other in the long mirrors. But the colonel did not come! Ten minutes passed. Miss Lucette became restless and fluttered aimlessly about the room, rearranged the card table, pulled a rose from a vase, snuffed a flaring candle, then sat down again. The clock struck 9! What was the matter with the colonel? He must be sick. No, Rose had seen him that morning. But it might be a sudden stroke. The more Miss Lucette thought of it the more worried she became. At a quarter of ten her doubt grew to an agonizing certainty and she fled into the hall with a white face.

"I have a headache," she told Jinny, "I think I will go to bed," and she hastened up the stairs unmindful of Rose and her sweetheart, a piece of forgetfulness which gave her dreadful qualms of conscience afterward.

Meanwhile the lovers wandered in the old garden, and talked of everything and nothing, until Rose, roused by the flight of time declared: "Why, aunty must not have played whist this evening. How dear of her to let us have all this time to ourselves. But I do think we ought to go in now, Edward."

When they reached the house the parlor lights were out. Alarmed, Rose hastened in, and was met by Jinny, her wrinkled black face as portentous as sculptured Fate. "Why, why," exclaimed Rose, "Where's Aunt Lucette and where is the colonel?"

"De connel ain' never come," whispered Jinny, direfully.

"The 'Colonel didn't come.' For goodness sake, Jinny, he must be dead or something! He never missed a Tuesday evening since I was a little weenty girl. Didn't he send any word?"

Jinny shook her head "No'm he ain' send no word, ner nothin'. 'Yo' go long, honey, yo' and yo' comp'ny, and ol' Jinny'll wait up foh yo'."

The next morning Rose rushed down to breakfast fairly bursting to question her aunt, but there was that in the gentle face which warned her to be silent. So they talked on indifferent topics, and hardly had they risen from the table when in came Mrs. Massey with an armful of sewing.

After she had settled herself in the most comfortable chair she began. "Just came over to see if you'd show me how to run up these new-fangled seams, Miss Lucette. Somebody said, you knew. I'm right tired out this morning, for a company of us was over at Mrs. Ryly's last night, playing cards. Col. Goldsborough was there. We had a real pleasant time. My, but she is a good-looking woman, just the sort men run after, maid or widow. Real fresh and blooming and jolly, you know," she concluded, comfortably.

Miss Lucette stiffened. "I do not know Mrs. Ryly," she said, coldly. "I understand that her family is of very low origin, and it grieves me sincerely to see a mansion, once owned by the Bryants, who in my day were one of the first families in Maryland, now occupied by a person whose sole claim to social recognition is wealth. Oh," she went on hastily, "I may be doing her an injustice; no doubt she is very pleasant, but there is one thing that I like to think cannot be bought—an honorable ancestry."

"I declare," said Mrs. Massey to Mrs. Scott afterward, "I felt just as if a canary bird had got mad and flew in my face. But for all her pride I knew Miss Lucette felt what I said about the colonel. If we can keep him away two more Tuesday nights that match is made, Minnie Scott, and you hear me say it."

For the two weeks that followed, the colonel and Miss Lucette led lives of torment. Whenever he approached her door, self-appointed fate met him and beguiled him elsewhere, while the hints and innuendoes thrown out by callers kept Miss Lucette on the rack. As the days wore on she became pale and thin. "Only the heat," she wearily told Rose whose anxious queries were so many fresh stabs. In secret she prayed over it long and hopelessly. Her old lover had become a necessity to her life and his devotion was the mainstay of her heart. Oh, the long—long days! She would not go outside her door for fear of meeting those who would mark her changed appearance. Yet with it all she did not blame the colonel; it was all the other woman's fault. "Bourgeoise," said Miss Lucette between her set teeth when she saw Mrs. Ryly driving down the street.

It was the fourth Tuesday night of the colonel's desertion. Miss Lucette had gone to her room immediately after supper. Rose had left the house on some little errand, and Jinny sat in the kitchen in her cook apron, dismal with all the mournful fervor of her race. Suddenly the knocker crashed. "Some o' dem trashy Mef'dis's, I spec," grumbled Jinny, shuffling to the door. She swung it open with a jerk, then nearly fell over backward as she beheld—who but the recreant colonel, resplendent in white waist coat, with a most astonishing boutonniere.

"Is Miss Lucette at home?" he inquired. For once Jinny failed in the usual response. "My Lawd, Cunnel," she gasped, "Yo' done skayhed me ha'af to def. Yo' c'n jes' step into de pahloh, n' I'll call her." The old negress mounted the stairs with all the haste she could command, muttering as she went, "Dah, I wuz in dishyer dirty ole apron an' no fitten hankercher on m'haid, but good Gord A'mighty! Whut Miss Lucette gwine say?"

Miss Lucette had heard the arrival. She was standing before her mirror nervously arranging her dress. Two bright spots shone on her cheeks and her hands trembled. The diplomatic Jinny took no notice of these things, but in a voice of dulcet suavity announced, "De Cunnel done come, Miss Lucette, n' I sont him into de pahloh. Dar, honey, lemme fix dat lace, n' heah's a clean hankercher."

As in a dream Miss Lucette yielded to her ministrations and then still trembling a little, started down. When she entered the parlor the colonel rose deferentially, but his cordial "Howdy do" changed to an abrupt, "Why, good heavens, Lucette, what's the matter?" for Miss Lucette had covered her face with her hands and was crying, crying like a hurt child with pitiful frightened sobs. Somehow the colonel understood that the barrier between them was broken at last, and his old-time sweetheart found herself in his arms, crying still, but now what happy tears. And as she rested there, she saw a vision of what the years that had been so lonely might have been, a vision of dear companionship with this man, of true wifehood, of motherhood—a sweet, full woman's life.

In a moment the colonel spoke, slowly, devoutly, "At last, thank God!" then, "Lucette, can you be ready to be married this day week?" and Miss Lucette, not without a gently triumphant thought of Mrs. Ryly, dried her tears and answered softly, "Yes, Jack."

In a German Pine Forest.

The golden sun is over all the land,
We stretch our arms a rosy day to greet;
The whole world sets its orchestra in tune,
And life is very sweet.

The sky hangs over in a turquoise arch,
The little snowy clouds befleck the blue;
The ocean's breathing softly stirs the hair,
The grass is bright with dew.

The symphony of Nature sounds for us;
The sea-god holds the baton in his cave:
It rises—falls—and soft as softest dreams,
A violin sounds from each little wave.

Now to the violins the colors come:
The purple of a Russian violet,
Surrounded by a tender, rippling green,
Like flowers in verdure set.

Swifter the baton moves, and from the wood
The wind-flutes lend a sylvan melody;
It speaks of youth and joy, of hope and love,
In sweetest harmony.

And we—we move and listen in a dream,
And gone are all our griefs and cares and fears,
As to our eyes the thrilling cadence brings
A few fast-fleeting tears.

Oh, when the Moderato is so sweet,
What must the grand Appassionata be
When thunder crashes, and the lightning's glare
Shows angry white the sea?

When all the viols shriek and sob and moan,
When all the flutes are crying out in pain,
Until the sudden, soft Adagio brings
The murmur of the rain.

Howe'er it be, it is not so today,
But ever does the measure rise and fall,
Until we deem this gentle music is
The loveliest of all.

Perchance in years to come we shall return,
One or another, to this charmed spot—
Come seeking for our happy hours again
—But find them not.

The violet and green may be as fair,
And while we look and listen dreamily,
The sea-god may begin, to welcome us—
His wondrous symphony.

But though the violins be ne'er so sweet,
And though the flutes sigh magic melody,
Alas! Alas! Not one of them can bring
My lost youth back to me!

Beat swiftly heart! Thrill all my being through!
The moments are so precious and so sweet.
Let all my hopes and dreams and visions know
Fulfilment soft and sweet.

The fluting of the wind shall charm my sleep,
The violins shall haunt my waking hours;
And I remember naught but sun and smiles,
And Summer seas and flowers.

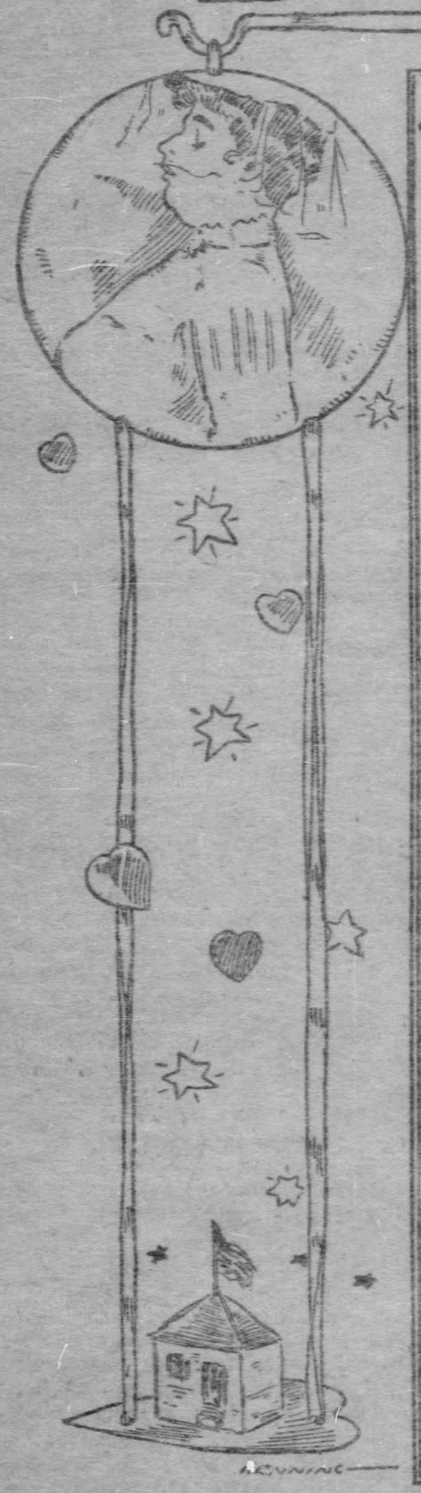
LITTLE POEMS OF GREATER PITTSBURGH

Number Twenty-Seven.

Strategic Mrs. Sammon and Subtle Mr. Slick



Mrs. Sammon is a lady with a patriotic turn
Of mind—she's heaps of ancestors so far as she can learn,
Who fought with bravery and skill the Revolution through
And left a glorious memory to which she's ever true;
So anything historic is her protege and pride—
Than lose one sainted landmark she would rather far have died.

One day was wafted to her ears a piece of dreadful news
That set the D. A. R. and Dames a-shaking in their shoes,
The ancient Block House was attacked—They said 'twould have to go!
A Syndicate had bought the ground, but ah, they didn't know
The mettle of the lady, for she smiled her iron smile
And said "I think that I can meet this treachery with guile."

Now there resides in Pittsburgh a certain Mr. Slick
Whose crafty brain most always makes his opponents feel sick,
And Mrs. Sammon knows him, and so the lady went
To try to gain his influence and get him to prevent
The awful desecration that the landmark threatened, and
He sat and smiled upon her in a way benign and bland.

Said he "I think it would be wise if you should move the Block
House out to Schenley Park, at my expense. I've not much stock
In my ability to check this Syndicate, for they Are coarse and unromantic men, and think it wouldn't pay."
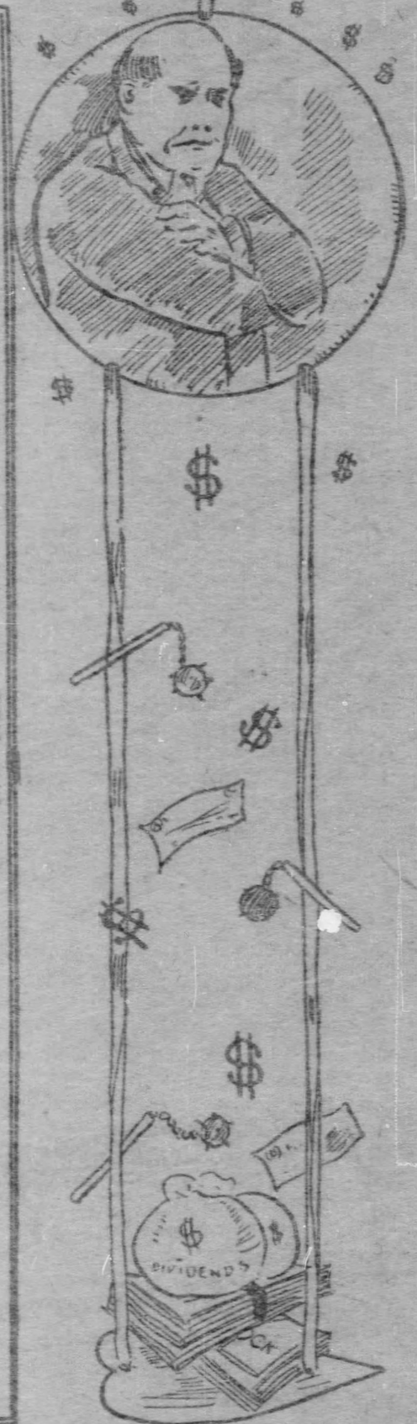
But Mrs. Sammon sternly said "I'll carry it to court,
Such sacrilege as theirs I'll see gets punished as it ought.

Now Mrs. Sammon didn't know that Mr. Slick was in
The Councils of the Syndicate and led the hosts of sin.
And when she did discover it, they say her wrath was wild
And made the rage of ocean waves or cyclones seem quite mild.
So now she never notices when Mr. Slick goes by,
But sternly looks right straight in front, and holds her head up high.

—THE TATLER.



A TALE OF PINK TEACUPS.

By HARRIET WHITNEY.

MISS HULDAH CLAYTON was pouring a steaming cataract from the tea-kettle into the big granite dishpan, when her young half-sister came around the corner of the porch and into the kitchen. Kittie's cheeks, usually like a nectarine, at present more nearly resembled a peony, but Huldah, intent on swishing the dish-mop, did not perceive it.

"I was going to wash the dishes in a minute," Kittie said apologetically. The washing up of the china morning service was Kittie's task.

"They should always be done immediately," Huldah said didactically.

"Yes," agreed Kittie, pulling the sleeves back from her round wrists, "I'll do it right straight." But Huldah grimly retained the mop and swirled up a delicate suds, into which she carefully slid a cup and saucer of the thinnest china, very small, and with a soft rose-flame glowing beneath the polished surface.

"I've begun now, I'll finish the job—why, where on earth's the other cup and saucer? Here's only one." She turned her glasses full upon Kittie's crimson countenance, which plainly proclaimed guilt.

"Catherine Clayton," said Huldah accusingly, "have you broken one of Grandma Clayton's rose-china cups and saucers?"

"I—there was a poor man came to the kitchen door asking for something to eat, and I gave him the pancakes and ham that were left, and a cup of coffee out on the cellar door—"

"What!" Huldah fairly shrieked, "you gave one of the rose-china cups to an old tramp, and didn't even watch him to see that he didn't run off with it? Here, let me get out quick—I'll teach him—" Scolding vigorously and dropping spatters of dishwater from her finger ends as she went, Huldah rushed out, while Kittie apprehensively followed.

Upon the sloping door of the outside cellar stood the empty plate, the knife and fork laid neatly across it, but no pink cup and saucer! Nor was there any glimpse of a grateful mendicant.

"Now," sputtered Huldah, in a babble of fruitless anger, "maybe you've learned a lesson—the first break in an almost priceless set of china. But you haven't the sense to learn anything; you'll go right on giving the dishes away to every old reprobate that comes along. That's all you care for grandma's heirloom! I was going to let you have it for a wedding present if you ever got married, as of course, you will; you're just silly enough. I shan't! I wouldn't have any man if he was inlaid with gold. But there won't be any cups and saucers left when you do get married; you'll give 'em all to tramps."

The 24 years of life adown which Miss Catherine Clayton had walked seemed to her to have led into a narrow, long lane, screened in some way from any chance arrows of the merry little god. When its monotony began to grow unendurable, the twenty-fifth corner led her suddenly into an enchanted plain, opening out of a picnic ground, wherein she met Cyril Dane.

Mr. Dane had come to fill a vacancy on the Edgeville Banner. He was tall and slim and dark, whereas Kittie Clayton was small and plump and fair. The law governing the attraction of opposites was harmoniously fulfilled, and in three weeks' time Mr. Dane was on a comfortable calling footing with Miss Kittie. Even severe Miss Huldah gave him prim welcome, and on one occasion invited him to tea. The rose-pink tea cups drew forth an admiring comment from the guest.

"They've been in the Clayton family for ages," Miss Huldah assured him, "and not a nick in one; and there wouldn't be a break in the set if a nasty tramp hadn't stolen one of them."

Mr. Dane branched suddenly into an observation about the Russo-Japanese trouble. It was Miss Huldah's pleasure to perform the rite of washing the tea service, while Kittie and Cyril strolled upon the lawn in the light of the sunset."

"Miss Kittie," the young man said, "I must tell you that I was once a tramp."

Kittie gasped. "A what?"

"Tramp," returned Cyril serenely. "This is the second time I have been in Edgeville. Six years ago I went into a wild goose scheme with a Bohemian chum of mine to start a weekly paper over in a snippy little town called Tinkersville—and a fine pair of tinkers we were. Took us a month or so to get on to the fact that our sheet was a vivid failure, and there we were, shipwrecked, miles in debt and with hardly a picayune between us. My chum footed it on farther west, but I yearned for home, and made for it via the tramp route. I struck Edgeville about 8 o'clock one morning. Oh, but wasn't I a sight for clean people to see—hot, dusty, perspiring, my charms enhanced by several days' stubble of beard and a limp. Hungry! I could have eaten fricasseed door hinges. The gable of a buff cottage peeped suddenly at me from a frill of cherry blossoms and inspired me with a lively hope of something good to eat. I thumped brazenly at the back door, which was opened by a vision with the bluest eyes and the prettiest pink frock I ever saw. And she didn't turn up her charming nose at my meek appeal, nor so much as hint wood pile to me—just trotted out a plate of flannel cakes and ham and a cup of hot coffee. She helped me carry the lunch to the cellar door, where she counseled me to have my picnic—why, I didn't know, until I heard from the open window above my head, words and tones that boded interruption of my banquet, for some one was threatening to 'teach me,' and evidently about to begin, so I simply filled my pockets with the cakes and ham, and with the cup and saucer in my hand I fled around the corner and into the elder thicket to finish my meal, intending to return the cup and saucer afterwards. Oddly enough, I had no sooner left the elders than I ran into my father's old friend, Judge Peabody (who got me on the Banner here). He carried me off to his house with my ill-gotten cup and saucer, which I managed to stow into my pockets on the sly. I had no chance to restore them, and when I started on my journey home, by grace of the judge's kindness, I found to my shame that I had run off with some good woman's pink cup and saucer. I promised myself to return some day and restore the property—and, incidentally, to behold the owner of the blue eyes and pink dress. Well, somehow, the years jogged away until this summer, and then in a whiff came my golden opportunity. And now I shall confess to Miss Huldah, and return the cup and saucer the 'nasty tramp' stole."

Kittie had listened to the story in a quiver of wonder.

"I can't begin to believe," she said, "that you are the poor, tired man I gave the breakfast to, though I do see now that your eyes are just like his. Won't Huldah be delighted. She never could get over the set being broken. She said I was to have it for a wedding present when I—"

"Then, darling," he said, "I'll just keep the pink cup—and you."

Further Recital of Some Unconventional Features of the St. Louis Bienniel of Federated Women's Clubs—Stories of the Various Receptions and Agitations Pertaining Thereto—Experiences Which the Delegates Passed Through.

THE final clearance of relics from the "Lost and Found" department of the recent biennial of women's clubs discloses a second open letter, evidently intended as a sequel to that published two weeks ago, and reads:

"Well, honey, I take it for granted that you received my last letter and that you will therefore know what I am talking about in this, for I am dying to let you know of how we ate up all the refreshments at one big reception before we had paid our respects to the hostesses, of how perfectly scandalous we behaved at the luncheon tendered us by the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Fair (club eyebrows elevate superbly over that official title 'Lady'), of how we made 'breaks' here and received 'bumps' there (particularly in the latter case from your own Pennsylvania State building), and, in short, some of the sub-rosa incidents of our long-drawn-out club feasting and 'partying.'

"On one occasion, honey, there were two important State receptions under way in the Masonic building, California holding forth in one Grand Chapter hall and Illinois in another. We came up the elevators in droves to California, where amid most extravagant decorations (flowers brought by special carload from the Golden State and with everything in sight suggestive of beauty and abundance) we decorously filed past the receiving groups. Refreshment committees disappeared before the oncoming hosts, while the vanguard of the latter following its unguided nose led the uninterrupted line of march to a large and inviting banquet hall in the vicinity. Here amid tropical environment and served by obsequious waiters we (in hundreds) ate ices, cakes and goodies to our hearts' content. But, Oh, honey, after some of us had 'discussed' our second and third 'helping' the news spread that it was not California's feast we were devouring (hers later was determined as a portable 'eat' of an orange, a lemon, a bag of assorted nuts and a box of raisins), but the 'layout' of the other state. What did the feasters do then, honey? Nothing. As innocent as kittens trying to forget the cream they had lapped, we wiped our lips, and assuming a 'never touched me'-air, paraded tranquilly to the sister reception. And the 'kittens' were not the delegates from the 'shut-in towns,' and the 'country clubs,' as it seems convenient to remark in caucus sessions occasionally when ramming home some hobby that the 'wide-awakes' are prone to oppose. No, honey, there were lace trains and shimmering furbelows and jewels and feathers that hailed from the more exposed and citified sections of this earth. But it all went.

"Something similar occurred the day we went to the garden party tendered by the wife of the Director of the Missouri Botanical Gardens, though refreshments were not involved in this case and there was really some little excuse, in that 'guides' were lacking at the entrance to the gardens when our long line of special cars rolled up. So we wandered about at our own sweet wills, through 'miles' of conservatory aisles and along many and devious paths. We peered at our reflections in the lily pond and willow lake, we climbed the observatory tower, we inspected laboratory and herbarium, we admired the statuary, viewed the cactus rockery, strolled through the 'wild garden' and finally met at the 'fountain,' all this before we (by the hundreds) grasped the fact that the garden party was a real thing, and that in a secluded section of the vast grounds, under the trees and on the lawn surrounding a family mansion, with hammocks and swings in evidence, dainty tables presided over by white-robed maidens, amid the flutter of fairy-like gowns, lace hats and piquant parasols, that the charming hostess with her aids was formally receiving the guests. This was a sad revelation for some, honey, for the day was hot, the walking had been 'wearing' and perspiration and languor did not improve the looks. But not for me, for I had adopted my usual custom of gluing close to the Boss and luckily was one of the early 'personally conducted' squads. And I might just as well confess here, Honey, that we six or eight members of the Punxsutawney delegation owe much to the Boss.

"It was the midnightly custom of this division Boss (who has attended every bienniel straight, clear through) as we used to land home one day by one after a strenuous day and evening, to discourse on what the future held and to hand out 'tips' for Punxsutawney conduct. While there were some in our little group who in privacy held doubtful views as to the efficacy of this 'one-woman' power, I personally never faltered in my loyalty. Was it a question of a reforming 'chic' to a collarette, the wrenching of a beloved object from a hat, a new hitch to the skirt, a larger 'rat' in the hair, a tighter snug' to the girdle, or a 'meet me sharp' in 'foyer,' 'restaurant' or 'street corner,' if the Boss dictated, I obeyed. I climbed into things—cars, cabs, 'buses, carriages and automobiles—when the Boss climbed, and I clambered down when the Boss led the way, and I watched hungrily for her perfectly 'at home' figure when the crowds pressed and surged. Of course, honey, my heart went out also to the Punxsutawny woman who 'dared.' She was not ready one day when the Boss announced that the carriages for our little company were awaiting. The Boss did not delay. She was too much of a general for that, and off we went. It was a lovely 'creation,' diaphanous, lacy and extravagant, a party garment out and out, that taxed the time of the delinquent. But the final touches were given at last and my lady fair over the 'phone ordered a special carriage. The direful message came that not a carriage, cab or conveyance of any kind would be in commission for several hours. What did that gem of a heroine do, honey? Why, in all her glory she took up her stand on the curb and watched and waited until the first empty equippage with coat of arms and footman and driver in livery came along, and she stopped the turnout, and by dint of fees, vows of secrecy and assurances that she was a lost and bewildered empress, rode to that reception in imperial state. But she returned with the Boss.

"How many of us knew until the Boss told us that one hostess who entertained us was the hostess who was to welcome Miss Alice Roosevelt as her house guest the next two weeks? How many of us knew until the Boss enlightened us that another hostess was the wife of the president of the Louisiana Purchase exposition? How many knew that another hostess was the wife of the mayor of the city? How many knew that Miss Helen Gould stood next to the hostess in the receiving line at another? How many knew that another hostess was called out of the city at the last minute and her place and name were assumed by a 'proxy?' No one, until the Boss unrolled her verbal scroll per midnight schedule.

"And it was the Boss who told us all to write tiny notes of acceptance on stylish notepaper to the different hostesses who had sent us cards, because, as the Boss said, 'after the hurly-burly is over these dispensers of hospitality will take time to read the notes and to discern who's who,' and maybe in the dim future invite us again as 'private citizens.' No, the Boss was all right, honey, and if I had not loitered behind to take a look into 'China' the day we toiled up the long slope to the rooms of the Lady Managers, I would not have known of the turmoil and confusion there, for the Boss was in the lead, and with her delegation had time to file in stately order through the corridors on whose walls hung the pictured representation of American beauty types, past the receiving groups in the luxuriously furnished drawing rooms, and finally to sit decently and in order in the caterer's collapsible chairs that closely lined the immense and richly decorated dining hall and to gaze on the two big oval center tables with their plateaus and vases of the most costly of hothouse blooms, their cut-glass candelabra, their ribbons, napery and silver, and thus to partake of four or five courses of the most sumptuous of menu luncheons. But, O honey, when I arrived, and I was not late, believe me, for hundreds followed in my train, the scene was one of wild uproar, waiters holding trays high overhead while surrounded by frantic, appealing, hunger-stricken victims; members of refreshment committees with garments disheveled were mounted on chairs and by the vain clapping of hands endeavored to secure quiet, as their shrill commands fell idly, 'Will those who have been served please, please leave the building?' while the stripping of the table decorations by countless hands, the exhibition of tempers, the giving way of skirts and belts, the feminine imprecation and disgust was something from whence I was only too glad to escape and of whose like I hope never to be part or parcel again.

"It was the advice of the Boss also on that never-to-be-forgotten day, when we made the soul-fatiguing round of dozens of receptions and special parties in the state buildings on the fair grounds, to 'get your souvenirs and "eat" if you can, but don't scrouge; if you ever run for office your enemy will remember.' So that while some of us only have a ribbon-tied wisp of grain from Nebraska as our individual souvenir, or perhaps a wilted jassemine flower from Texas, or a button from Kansas, or the memory of apples and oranges from the other states, yet in the aggregate, when later the Boss surveyed the collection, it was found that we had ably covered the whole range. It was this inspection, however, that led the Boss to show temper for the first time, 'not even a keystone, or a liberty bell—or—or—even a pickle, as a souvenir from Pennsylvania,' spurted she, while we listened in wonder as we were further enlightened. 'Pennsylvania,' with the largest, finest, most noble building of the whole lot; Pennsylvania, down a muddy street; Pennsylvania, with dusty furniture, with doors shut and curtains drawn; Pennsylvania, with no official hostess to its name—and Pennsylvania women on the grounds outnumbering those from other states. It's a shame, a burning shame!' We were too frightened, honey, to say a word, but the Boss told me confidentially the next day that she had written a 'blazing hot' letter to someone who stands for Pennsylvania, and that she was going to 'have it out,' and that it would not be a particle of use to put her off with the tale that there were ladders and scaffolding in the halls and that the electric lights were not in position, for, forsooth, what did one need of electric illumination at an afternoon function, and did not the noble-hearted Missouri commissioners, although their building was far from complete and not yet dedicated (as Pennsylvania's was) kick out the ladders and scaffolding and debris and allow the club women free reign?

"No, honey, it was not the Boss who was side-tracked from Press Day in the German Pavilion, and jumping into press labeled cars in front of the Odeon went whirling along, as an advertisement, toward the building of an enterprising journal publishing company and photographed as such en masse before the entrance. No, honey, she was in the right spot in the German Pavilion and heard what that Stone-hearted editor said about women readers and yellow journalism, and she dismissed the subject with a wave of her hand as trivial, saying in even tones little he or any 'man' editor (except the exceptional) knows what woman readers want.'

"But there, honey, I must stop, and stop short, or I will never get an invitation card to a function again. Your prosy but loving ALTERNATE."

The June Atlantic has a thoughtful disquisition upon "The Quiet Man" in all of his phases and from every point of view: Even his unquestioned domesticity may not be so comprehensive a virtue. To support some one besides himself in decency and honor is not all that a man should strive to do, though it is much. He should also feel the obligation to bring gaiety into the lives of those whom he loves. It is possible for some men by sheer earning power to provide their families with opportunities for travel and amusement and adventure. But the earning power of the majority is limited in these matters; and all the more is it necessary, then, for the man to bring variety and a cheerful activity and liveliness into his house. The fact that the routine of the day has been dull does not excuse him for being glum and silent at his evening meal. And too much of the quietness in the world is but the habit of a listless and brooding selfishness.

I Go A-Gossipping

THEY were all drinking tea with a vigor and talking with a vim no less stimulating than the whiff of their beverage. The managing mamma was the theme of converse and bless my soul, but I was sorry I spoke. Do you know they all jeered at me when I remarked that I didn't know any, for I thought managing mammas went out with faints and delicate ladies and croquet and tambour work.

For my part I can't possibly imagine what a modern six-footer, hands-six-and-one-half - feet - sevens - waist - 24, wants with a managing mamma—do you? But anyway these girls all lifted their tea cups above their heads and shouted and actually cheered me and called me a dear innocent, and asked where I had abode and what manner of woman I had been collaborating with.

No Managing Mammas, indeed! Why, they said managing mammas were as thick as hops in harvest time. Indeed, from the general trend of that conversation one would imagine there was nothing on earth in mamma shape but the managing sort, so having the entire assemblage against me I succumbed and invoked a blessing on a fluent tongue while I listened.

Bless your heart, do you know they nearly proved the case. They began away back with Ruth and Naomi, and they came clear down to these golf playing, man-chasing days and the instances they pointed out were "too numerous to mention."

Possibly you don't know it, but there are not only managing mothers a-plenty, but there are managing big sisters and managing big brothers and managing best chums.

Now, an instance of that, let me tell you, comes in the fact that a certain very popular young woman who made her way to the altar hymeneal about four or five years ago wore so many—many, you know—yellow ones that she walked with a limp! Circulation was noticeably affected and before the wedding dinner she really had to go away by herself and let some of them out—they were too tight, you see—but just think of it—seventeen of 'em all in a straight row for in all sense, of course, the poor bride couldn't possibly wear 'em one on top of one another.

But only fancy how willing and obliging she was and, by the way, the charm worked, too—almost every last "yellow one" did its Christian yellow duty and the several donors, themselves donned the orange blossoms within the limit of time prescribed by the code of ethics sacred to the yellow garter cult.

And not content with wearing 'em for girls just 'round about Pittsburgh, she wore 'em for girls away off in Erie and Kansas—interstate commerce notwithstanding. Oh, it must have been a great occasion and almost everybody in the crowd talked as though they would just as soon the popular girl would become a widow, so when she got married again they could all see to it that each one of the bunch should be elastically represented.

But as for the forward-looking Mothers—of course, you know that they are not always successful. Sometimes they play high and lose, as in the case of a very popular young heiress and a very popular dominie. It seems, according to these gossiping girls, that mamma had everything going just as smooth as smooth. Daughter had taken to golf like a duck to water and as the dominie was great as a putter everybody—mamma and the interested on-lookers, too, were willing to gamble that the thing was going through—but it didn't. Somehow it just didn't, but that didn't discourage mamma, who immediately set off toward the southland. Well, once again everybody noticed a distinct nibble at mamma's skillfully played bait. Indeed, all the relatives began to put on airs like they do just before an announcement, but it was only a nibble. Daughter came home and there were no announcements. But mamma finally did fix things up good and proper, and now, if you please, she "rests from her labors," to quote from the tombstones.

And the girls say she is so nice that the first thing you know she will be taking some other body's daughter under her wing and managing for her—you see she is regularly downright fond of that sort of thing, and she is experienced 'cause she has manipulated for two daughters and once one's hand is in and one has a lot of money, why there is nothing so fascinating—not even bridge whist.

And, anyway, this mother couldn't possibly help managing—it is in the blood, and there must be a lot of good sport in it if you are willing to look for it. And all the managing mothers don't manage just to get the "girls off their hands," either.

To be sure when you are in society you must not let too many seasons pass over your head if you wish to be known as a successful "debutante," so, I suppose mothers keep a watchful eye out for their little daughters on this account, but again there are other sorts of mothers.

One of the girls told a heartsome tale of a certain mother—a good churchly sort of soul, who though canny with wealth made lavish investments looking to placing her girls properly when they came out. She sent them to college and to schools for music and to Europe, and when all was over she came down to terms with them after this fashion.

"Now girls—you may have pretty clothes and you may go to the seashore and to mountains and you may have golf clothes and dance clothes and afternoon clothes and such things, but, girls—mind I tell you something has got to come of it."

Well, the girls went about a lot and nothing really did come of it, but finally the day arrived for one of 'em and listen to the twentieth century romance:

"Mamma and the girls were aboard a big ocean liner. The girls having been many times and oft-admonished were dutifully looking out, so they glanced prayerfully over the list of passengers.

"There, and it please you, appeared the name of the big brother of one of the girls they had known at college. To be sure the girl at college didn't really count for a great deal, but brother was a stunner—so handsome, you know, and so fortunate in his marriage connections—that is in his brother's marriage connections.

"So, on the strength of having known sister at college, Mother made herself acquainted and introduced daughter and daughter made time while the waves rolled and the moon shone.

"Once or twice during the trip on the Continent, quite by accident, of course, the travelers came upon one another and Mother took daughters and the young man under her good motherly wing and made everything 'couleur de rose,' as they say in the old-fashioned novels.

"Well, the days passed and the young man got away, but Mother kept her eye open and one fine day two or three years after while looking over the daily prints mother discovered that the young man was named among those attending a convention in the city. So she ingenuously sat her down and wrote a pleasant little motherly sort of note asking the young man to come and take dinner, and he came, and then she said it was so much nicer at her house than at a hotel, so she insisted on the young man's staying with them.

"Now, daughter had in the meantime looked up the sister and had a letter or two from her, so there was a lot to talk about and bimeby sister came on to visit and bimeby daughter went down east to visit and then mamma took it into her head to spend the summer nearby, and strange as it may seem Mother brought that romance to a most successful issue, and daughter was married with all the eclat that lots of flowers and specially composed music and 'way off ushers and maids and things could give the wedding.

"And afterwards daughter, who was a real college girl, you see, said 'marriage was just an episode' in her life, don't you know, and she really didn't see why so many folk made such a fuss about such a simple everyday matter. But all the admiring relatives and Mother didn't see it in that light, so they said it was truly the simplest and most romantic love story they had ever heard tell of, and there you are," concluded the girl who contributed this morsel of pure and unaffected sentiment to the general conversation. And when I looked a little bit nonplussed another girl said she had a perfectly lovely incident of romance in the making, and she proceeded to tell about a certain charming matron who was the mother of three promising sons. Well, the charming matron who didn't care a rap for society took up her abode in the East End, and the way she was received made her heart glad.

"Right 'round the corner," said the Girl, "was a family of the most fascinating girls imaginable, and it wasn't more than twenty minutes by the alarm clock until these girls and their mother were just doing everything for the charming matron. She got presents of preserves and home-made wine and cake and preserved ginger and jellies and she was taken out for an airing every few minutes and she had tickets for the matinee and the sons were members of a euchre club that the girls got up and their mother said she just loved to have the sons take her daughters to the club meetings for she always felt so safe and bless me the way cut and dry romance flourished in that locality was past believing.

"And then, finally, one of the girls confided that she had a suite of rooms furnished entire—pictures and bric-a-brac and books and honest injun Oriental rugs, awfully expensive ones, too, and Papa had said that when she got married she could take all those things with her and that he would give her a deed for a house."

And just then I screamed "Help!" And then they all said if I had time they could tell me a whole lot more romances just like these, 'cause they knew a heap of 'em. But I said I was in a hurry.

And I was. I pinned my Flop on tight and made a beeline for the nearest library so I could get a dictionary and look up the latest definition of the word "romance." 'Pon my word, I believe not one of those girls used that word correctly, what do you think?

Mistress Pepys.

WHY THE WIDOW SIGNED

An Amusing Story of Feminine Obstinacy, Masculine Cleverness, and a Trolley Line.

By HENRY CRANDALL.

THE supervisors of High Brook county had granted the High Brook Electric Railway Company leave to run a branch of its road down the Three-Mile highway to Bebee's crossroads, provided the consent of all the property owners along the road could be obtained. There were 12 owners, and in due time the consent of 11 was granted. The twelfth was the Widow Briggs. She was of middle age, stout and good-natured. It was expected that she would be the first to sign, and her refusal was a great surprise.

"My dear Mrs. Briggs," began the president of the road, as he called to talk matters over, "I think you will admit that this is the age of progress."

"Oh, yes," was the reply.

"And that an electric line in front of your door would be a great convenience to you and others."

"Yes."

"You could step on a car at any time and be in Hopeville in 10 minutes. No waiting—no horse to hitch up—no driving through mud or dust."

"Yes, that's so."

"Such a line must enhance the value of your property by hundreds of dollars. All the others want it, and I cannot believe that you will stand in your own light as well as theirs."

"I don't want to seem mean about it," observed the widow, and for some reason she blushed as she said it, "but I don't think I can sign the paper. That is, I may sign it next fall, but I wouldn't do it now."

"But this is March, and we want to get right to work at the roadbed as soon as possible," said the president. "We hope to have cars humming along within 60 days."

"They'd hum right by my gate, of course?"

"Right by your gate."

"And there'd be passengers in 'em?"

"Of course."

"They'd hum in the evening as well as the daytime?"

"Just the same, Mrs. Briggs. You are not objecting because you think the noise would disturb you?"

"Oh, no."

"And you don't feel they would damage your property?"

"Not at all."

"Then I take it you will sign and let us go ahead?"

But the Widow Briggs refused to sign and she refused to give a good reason why she refused. She preferred to wait awhile. Some of her neighbors were indignant and some fell to wondering. The president of the contemplated line was a man of 50 years of age, living with his third wife. He had studied women enough to know that her motives were not always on the surface, and he set himself the task of finding out why the Widow Briggs wouldn't put her name to that paper. He drove past her house in a buggy, and he walked back on foot.

Then he called upon Farmer Josiah Hardman, living a mile below the widow's. Farmer Hardman was a widower, and had been heard to say that he would not marry again if a million dollars went with the woman. A man may say much and mean little, however. The president took the farmer out to the barn for a long and confidential talk. There was no politics in it. At certain stages of the talk Farmer Hardman cast down his eyes and almost blushed, and at certain other stages he drew a long breath and apparently summoned up his courage. The president left him sitting upon the half-bushel measure, chewing a straw. His caller went directly to see Widow Briggs.

"My dear madam, I have called again to talk over the matter of your signing that paper."

"I couldn't do it before next fall," she replied.

"I am in hopes you will change your mind. However, let us talk over other things for a moment. I have been looking at your house from an architectural point of view. The porch on the front is a very cosy affair."

The widow looked up in a startled way.

"It is a charming place in which to sit of a summer's evening, especially if one has company—congenial company. There are not too many travelers over the highway, and the landscape is beautiful. Sitting there in congenial company, with the swallows flitting about, whippoorwills singing their evening song and the kine lowing their good-night to each other, two people would be almost tempted to romance. I presume you sat there last summer?"

"Y-yes," lamely replied the widow, blushing.

"And you expect to sit there this summer?"

"I—I guess so."

"Well, I can readily see that if you were sitting on the porch in the gloaming with congenial company you would object to a street car passing within 40 feet every few minutes and the passengers 'rubbering' at you. Your position is correct, widow, very correct. I have been a widower twice in my life, and I know that when I was sitting on the porch in the gloaming in congenial company I objected to the passing of street cars."

There was an eloquent silence.

"However, should it so happen that you were to go on a bridal tour by June 1, and that upon your return you were to reside in a house with a veranda all around it, it seems to me that your objections to the street car line would totally disappear. I cannot say whether I make myself exactly clear to you or not."

"I—I don't understand it all, sir."

"No? Well, as I am a busy man, and as I never could make myself clear on certain matters, I have had the courage to ask Mr. Hardman to step over here this evening and try to make it clear to you. I have always found Mr. Hardman's explanations clear, concise and lucid. He will stop over this evening, and I will call tomorrow, and—"

Mr. Hardman arrived with the gloaming and a lamp on a crocheted tidy flung out a welcome as he stepped on the porch. And the next day when the president of the High Brook Electrical road drove up and handed the Widow Briggs a paper to sign, she blushed, simpered, signed and said:

"Of course, I do not wish to block the wheels of progress. Go ahead with your street cars as soon as you please."

Kingsley House and Lillian Home

THE beginning of college settlement work in Pittsburgh is easily within the memory of all. Indeed, the origin of the movement itself does not antedate the year 1883, though the influences tending to such a movement can scarcely be limited to the era of Christianity. Poets, philosophers and dreamers have imagined and sung the day of universal brotherhood. The idea doubtless has stirred in the minds of countless reformers, enthusiasts, socialists and been revealed in diverse agitations, more or less revolutionary, for the amelioration of existent social conditions.

As concerns the local social settlement, however, it is safe to assume that relatively few outside of those directly connected either with the work or its support appreciate its influence or possibilities for social betterment.

To those who have made any study of the university settlement movement either at home or abroad, this account will necessarily appear inadequate, but to the majority of the community who are acquainted with college settlement work merely through the name of the local association, a brief account of its inception will prove enlightening. In no better way can we come to an understanding of what Kingsley house stands for in Pittsburgh today.

It is less than 20 years since the first social settlement was formed by men then teaching or studying at Oxford. Thomas Hughes, Frederick Maurice, Charles Kingsley, Robertson of Brighton, so-called Christian socialists, had been preaching their rugged gospel to the working classes and students from both Oxford and Cambridge had been delivering occasional lectures to the people of East London. These pioneer workers saw that more continuous work would be necessary if much was to be accomplished—that "every message to the poor would be in vain if it did not come expressed in the life of his brother man." In pursuance of this theory educated clergymen began to live as well as labor with the poor in East London. Two men connected with this work are prominently associated with the beginning and growth of the settlement movement, the Rev. John Richard Green, England's popular historian, and the Rev. S. A. Barnett, the present head of Toynbee hall, Whitechapel, and canon of Bristol cathedral. It was to the latter that Arnold Toynbee went in 1875 to offer his services. For several years he lived and worked in the Whitechapel district. After Toynbee's death, which occurred in 1883, Canon Barnett visited Oxford, where he delivered an address to Toynbee's friends. As a result of that address, it is claimed, the first university settlement association was formed, and Toynbee hall was opened in East London. Two years later the first university settlement was started in New York. Today hundreds of such houses on each side of the Atlantic, two or three in India and one in Japan are attempting to express to the neighborhoods in which they stand the principles of the founders. "Naturally the varying conditions of the communities, the different talents and resources of the workers, have produced houses widely differing in their form of work. But there are certain principles which are common to all settlements worthy the name. It is a place where men and women may make their homes, laboring intelligently and constantly for the needs of the locality, binding themselves by sympathy, service and love to the lives of the people, co-operating in every possible way with all who are working for the good of the neighborhood, carrying the great principle of friendship into all they do, and doing it in such a way that it shall be possible for all good men to associate themselves with the work. The settlement has no panacea to offer. It is simply a center of personal forces which spread themselves naturally through the channels of the neighborhood life. The family life of the house should be an example of fitness, grace, charm—an unconscious influence in the community for simple and sincere living.

The work done should be done without a touch of patronage or of superiority, but with genuine human feeling, sympathy, good will and common sense, with the realization that society means something beyond the list of families we have put into our social register.

everyday life. Ruskin at this time held the Slade pro- of England. John Ruskin, author, critic and reformer, already famous through his ethical essays, had stirred every department of society with his demand for the recognition and cultivation of brightness and beauty in fessorship on art at Oxford, and wielded a powerful personal influence over the young men with whom he came in contact. One of his most enthusiastic followers was Arnold Toynbee, conspicuous later through his public sympathy with the artisan classes; also that group of gifted young men, who became known later as revolutionary artists and thinkers under the name of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. Most noted among these might be mentioned William Morris, with his doctrine of the dignity of labor and its practical demonstration through the output of Merton and the Hammersmith schools.

To the generously impressionable mind there could possibly have been no more attractive leader than Ruskin. Of strongly ethical temperament, he always insisted that beauty should not be divorced from righteousness. His political economy, tending to socialism, has been questioned by the learned, but with all its vagaries it was a noble plea for the higher things of the mind against utilitarianism. With his private fortune, which was considerable, Ruskin reclaimed from squalor several London tenement houses left him by his father; he cleaned the streets between the British museum and St. Giles, opened a tea shop to prove that the retail trade could be pursued honestly and founded St. George's guild, a land-owning society with a museum for workmen, at Walkeley, near Sheffield. In these and numerous other works his fortune dwindled until in later years his only income was from the sale of his books.

At Oxford at this time there was a group of teachers and students who were thinking out their ideals of democracy and trying their theories in bits of local experiment. These men had made a profound study of the past and observed the movement of their own time. They decided that workingmen must help themselves if proper results were to be accomplished and that true democracy resulted from the growth of individual intelligence and strong personal character. The university extension movement had started from Cambridge some years before. Teachers any vice and you will find its source to be meanness, smallness of soul, and that begins when the child begins to choose the selfish, the petty, the mean at the sacrifice of the generous, the large, the grand. Jacob Riis tells the story of the little girl who one day found stowed away under the porch four kittens. A small terrier which she possessed discovered them about the same time and at once conceived the trick of burying the kittens one at a time in a nearby sand pile. The little girl rescued them several times from an untimely end, but one day she arrived on the scene too late, and finding one little kitten dead, carried it to her mother and exclaimed, "See, mother, a perfectly good cat spoiled." This is the story of many human lives in our cities today, spoiled by being thrust into conditions against which they were powerless to contend. It was to prevent this that the first kindergarten was started in Pittsburgh, and although they now number something like 54 the work is but begun.

So much with reference to the work in connection with the children themselves. Another phase is the opportunity which it offers for work in the home. The work the Kingsley house residents themselves consider most effective is that which touches directly or indirectly the home life of the children, their fathers, mothers and families. Good homes make good citizens. For this reason especial stress is laid on kindergarten work. Through the kindergarten the home can be reached as in no other way—the home of the present and the home of the future. It has been reached many times by workers who were not only kindergarten teachers, but mother-friends, companions and playmates of the children and friends and advisers of the mothers as well. These women know intimately the home life of every child attending their classes—they are part of that life. There is much talk heard lately of various substitutes for the saloon. The social settlement, workingmen's clubs, the institutional church are all advocated. A better substitute might be sought in the home itself, and the kindergarten can be a most effective ally in helping to work out the problem along that line.

The importance of kindergarten work cannot be overestimated, but what about the child when passed the kindergarten age—what is there for the boys, more especially? The value of work among the young is a subject that covers a large field, and in that field but little has been done in Pittsburgh. Among municipalities Boston and New York possibly lead in public and private efforts to reach and guide the exuberance of the youth of the community. The public playgrounds in Boston parks, with their gymnasium, swimming pools, swings, see-saws and sand piles all under the direction of sympathetic leaders are well known. New York has much in the same line as well as their model farms or gardens in the East Side, all of which are efforts to direct the interest of the children from the temptations of the street. Detroit has its Belle Isle park, with its finely equipped swimming and bath pools under the charge of an instructor, but until recently Pittsburgh has not so much as reserved for the Rainy Day Pleasures.

The pioneer in college settlement work in Pittsburgh was the Rev. Hodges, then rector of Calvary church, East End, and later dean at Harvard college. With the support of a few wealthy parishioners, Dean Hodges had been working for the betterment of social conditions in the congested portions of the city, notably the Point and Basin alley. There had been a series of union meetings, with Father Sheedy, held Sunday afternoons in the exposition buildings, at the Point, and following this the first social settlement in Pittsburgh was opened on Penn avenue. Later, as the work gained a foothold and supporters gathered, the present house was acquired and headquarters were removed to Fulton street, the teeming courts and alleys of the hill district affording full scope for the energies and abilities of the workers.

It has been the consensus of opinion with those interested in work looking to the improvement of social conditions that most headway is made by reaching and winning the children—through kindergartens, maybe, with the natural sequence of acquaintance and knowledge of the home and mother, then boys and girls' clubs, gymnasium, manual training, social or educational. It is in pursuance of this line of reasoning that the George, Jr., republic has been organized, and today the municipality of Chicago has a suburban home for so-called incorrigibles, which is in reality a home where manual training, gymnasium and educational classes open a new life of boundless possibilities to the waifs of the street.

This has been the controlling idea with the workers in Kingsley house—that the neighborhood may be reached most effectively through the children. First, for the sake of the children themselves, that they may be given a fair start in life; and in a more general sense for the sake of the community, that the men and women of the future may be more worthy and intelligent citizens. Analyze use of its children one street for coasting. Within the last few years park areas have increased, the summer playgrounds committees have thrown open the school properties for the amusement of the children, the bath house will accomplish much in this line and there is also the public playground with gymnasium apparatus in lower Allegheny, but beyond these points there are few rallying places where boys can meet. At home few boys are content to remain, as there is "nothing doing" at home, and healthy, wide-awake boys are not content to stay where "nothing is doing." In other cities they are using their public buildings as evening centers of education and recreation. Their school gymnasiums, their domestic science departments, their classrooms are being used to meet these very problems. If we are to get the largest results kindergarten work must be followed by other work along these lines, and this is just what Kingsley house aims to do. The rooms that are used for kindergarten classes in the morning are used in the afternoon for girls' work and for boys' classes in the evening. If these places of recreation and association were more commonly accessible the "street" and all that it means would be put out of business. The policeman whose beat takes him past Kingsley house stopped in for a call one evening. He wanted to know what they did with all the boys who used to be on the streets. "We do not have so much to do about here since this place was opened," he said, as he left.

With these advanced departments added to the kindergarten it is possible to go on year after year with the same children. There is no need to delude one's self with the expectation of any sudden transformation in boy or girl. The future is considered to be more important than the present. It is all that can be expected if there is cultivated in the girl or boy of today that fiber by which the man or woman of tomorrow shall be stronger to refuse evil and choose good. As the New England philosopher remarked, "It is not so much difference where they stand as which direction they are pointing."

And lastly, concerning the spirit, the attitude of mind in which this work is done: Whether it be the kindergarten, the boys' gymnasium classes, the girls' sewing class, the carpenter shop, the neighborhood visiting or any other branch of the work, all must be done in a spirit of friendship. Canon Barnett has said if a real friend could be found for every poor person in London, that city would soon be one of happy homes. There must be sincerity, genuine human feeling, sympathy and good will. The men and women who are making their work count with the boys and girls who come to Kingsley house are those who have got hold of the truth of the solidarity of humanity, and this is what keeps them true and sane in their work. Society to them means more than the few people who happen to move in this or that circle; it includes along with the families of the well-to-do the mothers and children struggling for existence in the miserable dwellings that open off the disease-breeding courts and alleys of the city.

In addition to the educational and recreation center that the house had become during the winter, it was the aim of the head worker to continue the good work during the summer season. With this end in view it was decided to use as a general playground the space in front of the house. From early June until the last week of August the yard was kept open from morning until dark. Beneath the shade of a large tent, which practically covered one side of the yard, the children played and swung the whole day long. Hammocks were hung on the veranda for the babies. High swings and some gymnastic apparatus were erected for the older children. Athletic contests were held every two weeks. The attendance was large, especially during the evenings when parents as well as children came for an hour's visit. On several occasions as many as 200 to 250 were counted on the grounds. The playground proved very useful to the workers. Through it they were brought in touch with many families unknown before. From the playground the children came into the kindergarten, clubs and classes of the following winter's work. The neighborhood exhibited the best of feeling toward the playground. Not one word of complaint was heard. The flowers about the yard were at no time touched by any of the children coming or going each day. During the season Kingsley house was represented by three baseball teams, one of players 12 years of age, one of players 16 and one of players 20. Thirty-eight match games were played, 26 of which were won. A squarely played game, with energy bent to win, was the principle on which the teams did their best work.

Last summer, through the generosity of Charles Taylor, the association came into possession of a large house suitable for carrying on "fresh air" work. The house has been called "Lillian Home," and is situated at Valencia, Pa., about 18 miles from the city, and controls a tract of some acreage in field, wood and garden. The house by additions this year has accommodation for 134 small beds, with a dining room that boasts a seating capacity of 175. The home dairy supplies 150 quarts of milk each day, while vegetables and fruit are raised on the farm in ample quantities for the home table. A further improvement this year has been the building of a swimming pond a short distance from the home. Bathing houses are also in course of erection. New tennis courts and croquet grounds have been laid out in front of the house. Another addition is a big tent under which have been placed chair swings and hammocks for the smaller children. "Lillian Home" was formally opened for the current summer on May 21, when 395 people spent a day at the farm. This party comprised boys and girls belonging to the Kingsley house clubs and classes. On Saturday, May 28, the Kingsley House Sewing school, consisting of 154 girls between the ages of 7 and 16, were given their annual picnic at Valencia. On the following Saturday the Kingsley house ball team had opportunity to try the new ball field that has been laid out on a level plot convenient to the house. On June 1 a party of 50 mothers and kindergarten children took possession of part of the house for a two-weeks' outing. A similar party followed two weeks later. The mothers and children sent in these parties are being taken from all parts of the city, and this will be the plan in force during the summer. Anyone knowing of needy persons is invited to communicate with the head worker of Kingsley house and prompt attention will be given the request. The question of securing funds for the carrying on of this work is an ever present one. Last summer the amount secured was something over $3,000; this year about double that sum will be needed on account of the increased capacity of the home and the fact that work has started earlier. About one-third of this amount has been contributed up to the present time, and those who wish to help along this most needed work should communicate direct with the head worker at Kingsley house, Pittsburgh.

The boys of the Newsboys home will this year contribute $50 to the "Lillian Home" fund. Last year the same boys sent $25. They will have the privilege of naming several mothers and children in the neighborhood of their home, who will go to Valencia as the guests of the boys.

The accompanying pictures will give some idea of the way the time is spent at "Lillian Home." The rising bell rings at 6:30. For half an hour the children are busy in the washrooms. Breakfast is ready at 7:30. This over, the girls return to their sleeping rooms to set them in order. Some help in tidying up the halls and porches. Others help to shell peas or string beans for dinner. The boys assist in cleaning up the yard. These morning tasks over, the day's play begins. Baseball and other games, a visit to some "unowned" apple tree, fishing and berry picking are some of the amusements for the boys. After dinner the usual demand is for a swim, and for a swim nearly every boy will go. The pond is situated about a mile from the house, but what signifies a mile with a good swimming pond at the end? The girls spend the morning hours in the cool strip of woods back of the house. Here they make sunbonnets, weave baskets or do beadwork, play jacks, keep house or lounge in the hammocks and swings. In the afternoons there are strolls across the country and into the woods for wild flowers, stopping beneath shady trees for favorite games or songs and stories, or possibly there will be a wading party down to the creek. In the evenings small entertainments are arranged in which all who can are encouraged to take part. One evening there is a grand supper in the woods. Into big farm wagons, well padded with hay, the children scramble, and after the supper in the woods there is a two hours' ride before bedtime. Much of the success of the work at the home is due to the kindliness and tact of the house mother, Mrs. Moore, to whom the children come with all their troubles and quarrels and whose decisions are often more effective than those of the real mothers. Under her kindly sway willful badness becomes tractable and little citizens learn to frame and accept apologies when mayhap the home life knows little of such social amenities. That hundreds of children returned from their brief visit better in physical health is much. That happiness is given many to whom it is usually unknown is something more. Yet more important than either of these is the appreciation that many have been generously treated. This beyond doubt has its influence. The world's stock of kindliness, of courtesy, of gentleness and patience is immeasurably increased through the work at "Lillian Home," and to its visitors is given a strong impetus for noble manhood and womanhood.

The Wayside Hedge.

The passing of the wayside hedge, one charming feature of the rural landscape which was common to regions as far apart and dissimilar as Maine and Virginia, has gradually deprived many birds of their old haunts. Along the unfrequented hilltop roads and other neglected byways the wild hedge still persists, and in such places the birds are fairly numerous; but beside the turnpikes, and all the much-traveled ways, the picturesque old stone walls and lichen covered fences shaded with elder, wild cherry, and sumac, and other shrubs and trees in rich variety, interwoven with grape vines, clematis, and Virginia creeper, spontaneous growths more charming in their free profusion than the hedgerows of the old world with their monotony of tended loveliness—these have largely disappeared. Instead thereof we see the ugliest substitute for picturesqueness and beauty that modern utilitarianism has been able to devise—the wire fence upheld by bare posts, kept carefully clear of "weeds and brush," a phrase used to cover all wild growths, whether noxious or beneficent.

The old fence with its wealth of shrubbery and creepers sheltered numberless bird communities. A country child of former years, familiar with every yard of fencing upon the farm, could tell of a snug bluebird home, occupied each year in a well-concealed nook, like a little wigwam, at the junction of fence rails and slanting stakes topping an old stone wall, overhung by Virginia creeper, and shaded by wild cherry trees. In one of these the child had watched a robin "plasterin' her adobe nest" with an eye to good foraging close at hand in the caterpillar's tent. Not far away one might hear the call of a catbird from its ancestral home, and beside the wall, in a deep briery tangle too well defended to be reached by the lithest squirrel, a quiet chippie would have hidden her pretty basket. The child had found out the secret of the phebe's nest in the little cavern made by a projecting stone in the wall sheltered by an overhanging larger one. The wrens knew of many a safe nook for their nestlings in the old fence, the song sparrows loved it, and there in mid-summer one might see a gentle pair of cedar birds, or catch the flash of shining wings and the warbling of goldfinches. Somewhere within call would dwell the Greatheart of the feathered community, the kingbird, ever ready to spring to the rescue upon the first note of alarm at the approach of some rapacious intruder.

English Housekeeping by Americans

SOME ENGLISH DISHES

By JESSIE BURCHARD

THE only really distinctive English soup I learned to make was not English, after all, but Scotch—Scotch broth. It is different from any American soup I ever ate, and is very delicious. To make it one requires either a sheep's head or half a calf's head thoroughly cleaned and scalded, then put on in cold water and allowed to come to a boil. Then all sorts of vegetables are prepared—almost anything you happen to have on hand—carrots, onions, cabbage, turnips, parsnips, celery, all sliced thin and then shredded very, very fine, say three each of the carrots, onions, turnips and parsnips, a quarter of a head of cabbage and a small head of celery. A few sprigs of parsley are chopped fine and added, also a pinch or two of powdered mixed herbs, salt and pepper to your taste, and let it simmer gently all together about four hours. At the end of two hours a cupful of pearl barley is added. The soup is almost a porridge when done and is an excellent cold weather dish, with the added recommendation that it is better every time it is reheated. My cook used to take out all the meat when the soup was done, put it through the chopper, season it highly and pack it into small jars, to turn out and slice for lunch later.

An excellent fish dish for breakfast is called kedgeree. The night before a slice of cod, or any white fish (about a pound), is boiled and picked up fine, free from skin and bones. In the morning boil a cup of well washed rice in plenty of salted water, drain and add to the fish; season well, place over the fire, break in a couple of eggs, and let cook till the eggs are done, stirring all the while with a fork. This should be dry and rather mealy and is very much appreciated in our family.

Another preparation of fish was called by our cook a fish cake, though just where the cake comes in remains to be seen. Either the remains of boiled fish, or some freshly boiled, may be used. It is moistened with cream sauce and placed in a baking dish. Then six or eight large potatoes are mashed with a little milk and butter, and if you want it extra nice a well-beaten egg may be added, and this is spread over the fish in a thick, even layer and browned in the oven. Either of these dishes is very nice for breakfast or luncheon.

Sometimes I would buy a lobster already boiled or a tinned one, and, if the first, Mrs. P. would pick all the meat to bits and season it with a mixture of salt, cayenne, mustard, a little oil, a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, and, if liked, a sprinkling of celery seed or of curry powder; then fill it back into the shell, cover it with fine crumbs and dot it with butter and brown in the oven. A large crab is nice done in the same way, but the English crabs are large, about five inches across the body alone, one being enough for three or four persons.

The roast beef of old England is properly served with browned potatoes, Yorkshire pudding and horseradish sauce. The browned potatoes are done just as we do them at home, in the pan with the roast, basted as often as the meat, with dripping. The Yorkshire pudding is a most delicious accompaniment to a good piece of beef and is very easy to make. Beat three eggs, whites and yolks together, add one pint of milk. Put six large spoonfuls of flour in a bowl, moisten it gradually with the eggs and milk, season with salt and pepper. The English cooking book says strain the mixture through a fine sieve, but I always give it a thorough beating with a Dover egg-beater, and let it go at that. Put some of the beef dripping in a baking pan, pour in the batter, which will be exceeding thin. Allow it an hour and a half to bake—the first three-quarters undisturbed and after that basting a little now and then with the beef dripping. This may be cut into blocks and served on the platter with the roast or on an accompanying dish.

I cannot give the exact recipe for the horseradish sauce, but I think I can make it clear enough. Grate your horseradish—half a teacupful will make enough for eight people at least. Mix with this about a tablespoonful of sugar, a teaspoonful of mustard, half a teaspoonful of salt, a dash each of cayenne and black pepper and two tablespoonfuls good vinegar. When these are well mixed add enough thick cream to make it of a good consistency and serve in a small sauce boat. There are two good ways I learned to dispose of left-over beef—cottage pie and toad-in-a-hole. For the latter, cut the meat into small blocks and put in a baking dish with whatever gravy is left, pour over this a batter made precisely like the Yorkshire pudding, and bake till the batter is done. The cottage pie is exceedinly savory and is begun by mincing the meat very, very fine, and seasoning it rather highly with mixed herbs, salt and pepper. Moisten it with any gravy remaining and put all in a baking dish. Over this spread an inch-thick layer of very finely chopped onions, seasoned with salt and pepper, and over all spread a thick layer of mashed potatoes prepared as for the fish cake. Bake in a moderate oven until the potatoes are brown. Another very good made dish is macaroni with minced meat. Boil some macaroni 20 minutes in salted water, drain and blanch it, and chop it rather fine. Put the meat through the chopper, and add to it sufficient stewed tomatoes or tomato sauce to make it quite moist. Add also any left-over gravy, and season highly; then butter a baking dish, put a layer of macaroni in the bottom, then a layer of meat, and proceed in this way, having macaroni on top. Cover with buttered crumbs and bake till they are brown.

Mutton is usually served with onion sauce, which seems particularly appropriate and is very easy to make. The onions are cut up fine and stewed in salted water until they are tender, then drained and put into a pan with enough milk to cover them well, a good lump of butter, salt and pepper. Thicken slightly with flour or cornstarch and let cook 15 or 20 minutes.

An excellent curry can be made of left-over mutton, although my recipe is a sort of adapted one taken from several. I put a large spoonful of butter in a saucepan, and when it is melted, add two or three sliced onions and cook over a moderate heat till the onions are tender. Then stir in two spoonfuls of flour, and when thoroughly incorporated add sufficient boiling water to make a good sauce, not too thick. Salt and pepper it, add a good flavor of cayenne and curry powder to taste. Some people like it so much hotter than others that one cannot lay down a rule for the amount to be used. Then I pare two good firm apples, cut into small blocks and add to the sauce, together with two large spoonfuls of grated or dessicated cocoanut, and the meat, cut into cubes of about an inch. Simmer all together very gently, stirring often, for about half an hour or longer. Serve in a border of rice boiled so that every grain is separate.

One English cook had made a sort of hotch-potch with cold mutton, sliced and placed in a saucepan with two heads of sliced lettuce, eight or ten young onions sliced, some stock, if convenient; if not, water may be used, adding a good lump of butter, salt and pepper. Simmer together an hour or more and add a pint of cooked peas. Serve on toast points, after slightly thickening the sauce. A haricot of mutton is made by soaking a cupful of navy beans over night in water with a little soda in it. Cut cold mutton into small blocks, add any gravy you have, an onion sliced, a couple of thinly sliced carrots and the beans. Simmer slowly till the beans are done. This is a very nutritious dish for winter.

One more concoction of mutton is made of neck chops, allowing two to each person. To say eight chops, allow a cupful of pearl barley, a cupful of sliced onions and a cupful of sliced carrots. Put all in a saucepan, cover well with cold water and allow to simmer for at least two hours. Longer cooking improves it. Season well with salt and pepper. This will be found excellent.

We used to enjoy pork chops done in this way, which may be as novel to most Gazette readers as it was to us. The chops are laid in a large dripping pan in a single layer and seasoned with salt and pepper and a thick sprinkling of sage. Then a layer of sliced onions is added, at least an inch thick, also salted and peppered. If you have any cold potatoes, you can slice them and make another layer above the onions; put a little water in the pan, cover it and cook in a moderate oven for at least an hour. This will be very much liked by those who are fond of sage and onions.

A real Lancashire dish is hot-pot. It is best made in a round brown earthenware dish, with straight up and down sides, bearing the words "Hot-pot," in black letters. Whether the inscription has anything to do with the excellence of the dish I am unable to say. However, I believe one could safely venture to make it in any earthen dish or in a bean pot. Cut into small pieces some beef, any ordinary cut not too fat may be used. Put a layer of it in the hot-pot dish, then a layer of sliced onion, then a layer of potatoes, in slices about half an inch thick. Continue thus to the top of the dish, put in salt enough to season, some pepper and fill the dish about half full of boiling water, turn a heavy plate over it, and bake in a moderate oven for three or four hours. Keep a little water in the dish, and during the last hour stir often from the bottom. This is most savory and a very economical dish. A variation on it may be made by adding a cupful of strained tomato.

Round steak makes a delicious stew, cut into pieces about two inches square, rolled in flour and browned in a little melted fat. Then boiling water is poured on, three or four sliced onions and as many sliced carrots added, and the whole seasoned with salt, pepper and herbs. Then add at least a pound of fresh mushrooms, peeled and chopped, cook half an hour longer, thicken if it requires it, and serve in a border of mashed potatoes. This is fit to set before a king or any other discriminating person.

The Maryland lady who said that her "husband was such an epicac that he was very hard to caper for" would probably have found "capering" easier had she known of a seasoning known as "herbaceous mixture." It is a very fine powder and is bought in small bottles, and a very little of it will season a great deal of meat, and it is simply delicious.

If round steak is put two or three times through the chopper and then pounded to a pulp and mixed with half as much bread crumbs, seasoned highly, formed into cutlet shape, dipped in egg and crumbs and fried in hot dripping, then make a brown sauce, adding a tablespoonful of beef extract and a good pinch of "herbaceous mixture," and serve on a bed of boiled spaghetti, you will feel glad and grateful you have lived long enough to taste such an excellent dish.

Steak and kidney pie is another good old English standby. Cut your steak and kidneys into small pieces—two pounds of steak and half a pound of kidney will make a good-sized pie—and stew them till tender, seasoning well, and adding a sliced onion. Turn into a baking dish, cover with a good plain crust and bake till the crust is done. The English cook will ornament her pie with a twisted border and leaves of pastry and an elaborate design in the center, which is usually supported by an inverted egg cup beneath, which also holds the gravy. It is a good idea to have a teacupful of gravy to pour into the pie after it is done, as the crust absorbs so much.

In speaking of fish, I forgot to mention one or two very excellent sauces. Parsley butter is used for plain boiled fish, and is nothing more than a good drawn butter sauce made thick with finely chopped parsley. The same drawn butter with shrimps added is used for filleted sole, fried, or for halibut steak.

A boiled or roasted fowl is always accompanied by a sauce boat of bread sauce, a much maligned but exceedingly savory sauce, when well made. The easiest way is to break up a pint or so of stale bread, no crust allowed, and put it to soak in enough milk to well cover it, on the back of the stove. An onion is peeled and put in whole, and the whole left where it will keep hot without cooking for an hour or two. Then take out the onion, add salt and pepper to taste, and beat till all the lumps are out and the sauce is about as thick as griddle-cake batter, adding hot milk if necessary. If the onion flavor is not very pronounced, grate a little onion and add, and don't spare your pepper.

With game, such as grouse, partridge, pheasant, etc., this sauce is also served, and usually a small entree dish of fried crumbs, which is very fine dry crumbs fried in butter and served golden brown and smoking hot.

I must mention one or two vegetables which are worthy of note. Carrots and turnips are boiled together, drained well, mashed and seasoned, and are very nice with roast beef or mutton.

String beans, known on the other side as "kidney beans" or "scarlet runners," are cut in the finest shreds imaginable, the whole length of the bean, and cooked as we cook them. The fine green "strings" make a very pretty garnish.

My cook used to take cold cauliflower, break it into small bits, put it into a baking dish, cover with a cream sauce, then a good layer of Parmesan cheese, and then buttered crumbs, and brown it in the oven. This she would serve alone, as a course by itself, as she also did macaroni with cheese, or spaghetti ditto. This same cook made a salad of shredded lettuce, young onions, chopped radishes and celery, cucumbers, and perhaps a little beet, covered with a French dressing, that made a delicious accompaniment for any cold meat.

We had opportunities of tasting a great many other typical British dishes, and in my next paper I will describe some of the sweets that impressed themselves upon my American mind as being particularly pleasing.

THE VOICE OR THE MAN

HORACE FIELD wrinkled his brows in perplexity. There was something about the girl this afternoon which he could not fathom—some undercurrent of thought, some hidden meaning in her words quite beyond him.

He flattered himself that all Nan Bronson's various moods—and they were legion—were as an open book to him; but today there was something very strange in her manner, and, strive as he would, he could not satisfactorily determine its portent.

"I think, Nan," he said solicitously, "you are working too hard. The strain of all this is telling on you tremendously. Are you still practicing as persistently as ever?"

"I haven't sung a note for a week," she said, and a suggestion of sadness in her voice made him look up quickly.

"Good!" he said. "You're getting some good, practical sense at last, I'm glad to see. You need the rest."

"I haven't done nearly as much as I might," she said almost bitterly.

"My dear child," he said gravely, "you mustn't for a moment chide yourself on that point. You are human, and being human you must remember, there are but 24 hours in a day, and that the road to any real success is always a thorny road."

"It's very good of you, Horace, to try to comfort me," she said, "but, to tell the truth, I'm horribly at odds with everything today."

He looked at her with a deprecating smile.

"What's the trouble?" he asked. "Did Fenetti rave because your A was a trifle flat?"

"Oh, no. It's not that. Fenetti and I have gotten along beautifully for the past two weeks for the very excellent reason I haven't seen him," she said.

"You're taking a more complete rest than I imagined," he said. "But it's no more than you owe yourself."

"I'm not so sure of that," she said.

"I am," he replied. "When do you and Fenetti resume the campaign?"

"I shan't study again with Fenetti," she said, wearily.

"Have you thought of any one else?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"Well, now you must get good and rested before you start in again," he advised. "Nan, we are all looking forward to the time when you will bring the world to your feet. It means very much to some of us—and to me, you know it will justify the sacrifice. If you succeed and are happy in your success, I will be content, even though the success has cost me—you."

She moved uneasily.

"You are so sure the life you have chosen will be sufficient to you that I shan't question you on that point again," he went on. "Only, since you have chosen it, I want you to have all that it gives—and I want you to be happy."

She looked at him in mute appeal and the tears overflowed her eyes.

"Don't," she said chokingly, "please don't."

Then suddenly her head went down among the sofa pillows beside her and she sobbed without restraint. He went quickly to her and gently stroked the brown head.

"Tell me," he said simply.

"There is some throat affection," she said brokenly, "nothing that will seriously impair my health, but enough to ruin my voice forever. Dr. Patterson told me this morning."

"Poor child! Poor little girl!" he said softly.

For a time there was silence. Now and then she caught her breath sharply.

"There is so little I can offer in compensation for your loss," he said at length, "nothing, indeed, but a world of love and devotion and unending endeavor to make you happy and contented."

"Do you think," she said fiercely, "I could refuse you when my voice was strong and sound, and then let you marry me when it is broken—gone—forever? Do you think I am as selfish as that?"

"Do you think," said he, "my love has changed a particle? Do you imagine that it is less or more than it was then—than it has always been?"

She looked at the grave, strong face. She felt his protecting care, his infinite tenderness, his quiet strength. Her fingers tightened about his hand. She laughed hysterically.

"I'm glad," she said, "glad—do you understand? I have never been happy—I never could be—without you."

On Careless Habits : What the Well-Bred Girl Will Avoid.

By ELIZABETH BEVEREDGE.

IF ONE COULD BUT FULFILL the philosophic injunction and "see ourselves as others see us" it is safe to assume that there would be a speedy abandonment of various careless habits into which the majority of womankind have fallen. Habits soon become masterful. If good, they should be allowed to continue. If adverse, the sooner something of an uplifting character is substituted, the better. That the mind affects the body few intelligent people now doubt and with this aspect of the case in mind, the formation or eradication of certain habits will assume new importance. Few of us there are who have not peculiarities unnumbered, of speech, of expression of gesture, of carriage or of posture. Harmless many are to be sure, charming some may be, but the everyday man or woman and more especially the everyday girl has allowed herself to fall into habits that are as detrimental to her appearance and prospects as they are offensive to the feelings of her fellow mortals. Habits of speech will unvaryingly reflect the atmosphere of home and associates, albeit a child at the age of 10 or 12 through school or neighborhood affiliations will soon come to recognize the difference and be in position to distinguish between the correct and incorrect. It is within the province of every teacher to point out and endeavor to correct these inaccuracies and idiosyncracies whether arising from illiteracy or provincialism, and by the tactful elimination of just such errors is shown the breadth of intelligence characteristic of the all around educator. It is as much within the duty of an intelligent teacher to explain the bodily ill effect of improper posture, or the debasing effect of cheap literature as it is to correct errors of grammar or diction. That the child should have before it the ideal of a well trained, evenly poised mind and a well developed, thoroughly healthy body and be taught the interrelation of health in mind and body and the influence of one upon the other and both upon success in life is of prime importance in all rational training.

It is advisable in all cases to follow the scriptural injunction and do well in the days of our youth in order that in age we may not depart therefrom. The tenacity with which one holds to early bad habits is accountable for many laughable if not humiliating experiences in later social or business life. Vanity is a saving grace with the majority of the womankind and a faithful mirror will correct many early indiscretions of posture and grimace. Partly from his being more single minded in his pursuit of greater matters and more careless as to detail, the effect of early ill training is always more strongly marked with men than women.

Of the careless habits noted in everyday life, many are to be deprecated from a standpoint of unsightliness, others rise to the enormity of vulgarisms, while still others may be regarded as a positive menace to health. Of the first named perhaps the most common habit is that of crossing the knees. In our grandothers' day no gentlewoman would be seen with her dainty feet other than firmly placed on terra firma, or modestly peeping in and out beneath her voluminous drapery in the requirements of orderly locomotion. It may have been the advent of bicycles, or the vogue for cross-country rides a la rational or the more strenuous outdoor life of our day that has trained womankind to unblushingly suffer the public regard of her nether extremities, but even the most advanced and enthusiastic advocate of the rights feminine will deprecate the vision of sister, wife or sweetheart sitting in public, parlor or conveyance with knees crossed and general aspects of careless abandon. Custom permits that the feet may be crossed beneath the sheltering haven of the skirts, but this does not allow that the most daintily clad foot shall prove a stumbling block to the unwary passerby or that there should be an elevation beyond that necessitated by dampness or draughts. How often have you been distracted from book or converse by the vigorous dancing of some deminine foot, poised well in air or the unrestful tapping of a slippered toe that endeavors to outpace a too voluble tongue. The advent of the summer season will also bring into unpleasant prominence the active young person who seems unhappy unless churning the air in porch swing or hammock or causing the creaking boards of the hall or porchway to scream with the violence of her rocking. The rocking chair mania may in truth be pushed to the extent of a public nuisance for, however heroically one may determine not to be one of the occupants of a dashing swing or hammock, there is no expedient except that of flight by which you may avoid the plaint of the hard worked rocking chair.

Another development of misdirected activity annoying to the beholder, is the fingering of the person—plucking the finger nails, the lips, caressing the buttons or blouse trimmings, dangling jewelry and a thousand other trivial manifestations of nervous restlessness. Teach yourself composure. First correct posture and then ease and contentment in that posture. See that the muscles of the back and neck support the head without the assistance of the hand. This contortion not only drags the shoulder out of position, but destroys the poise of the head and rubs the elbows into unsightly redness. When interested in a book, do not let a wayward finger scratch or pluck at the head or hair. Do not manicure your finger nails in public. The requirements of the toilet should be looked after in private and the ears, teeth or finger nails should be given attention before you leave your dressing stand. If your teeth bother you after dining relieve yourself behind the shelter of your napkin and see to it that the dentist is called upon to prevent recurrence of the trouble.

The Lop-Sided Standing Posture, a Common Fault.

Above all do not lounge in public. If needs be you must rest, do so in the privacy of your own room, preferably with loosened clothing and on the broad of your back. Nothing justifies a woman's reclining in public other than faintness or inability to maintain an erect posture. If you must lounge, however, lounge on your chair or against some convenient doorway, rather than upon some more or less willing companion. There is nothing more annoying than to be used by an invertebrate companion as a prop. Stand upon your own legs as heaven intended you should. Believe me this faculty of standing alone will in great measure suffer from atrophy unless exercised, and while in a mental as well as a physical sense, you may save yourself some exertion by reliance upon some conveniently amiable associate, in the end you will more than lose in your inability to look out for yourself when called upon to do so. Another sin against the rights of others most frequently indulged in by children, is the handling of a companion's jewelry or ribbons or person. Keep your hands to yourself. Respect the personality of your associates. To the more trained culture of the European, there is something offensively familiar in the touch of a detaining hand. Language was given us for the expression of thoughts and the impression of our views on diverse subjects. Learn then so to use your mother tongue that emphasis may be given vocally rather than fistically. If your companion would away, let him depart in peace and be assured he will on next meeting prove more amenable to argument and reason than if you had by a detaining hand prevented the departure that his convenience or necessity prompted.

It should not be necessary to state that whispering in general company is not permissible. Children are often permitted this breach of etiquette for obvious reasons, but a word of excuse is always due the company. Adults should so time their speech or curb their curiosity that the company may hear every word without offense. If you must read a letter, a paragraph or a telegram a word of apology is also necessary, unless it so be that the delivery of the post has so diverted the company in general. The observance of all of these points constitutes that indefinable something called "good breeding." It is true, many have to be taught its dictates by the harsh rebukes of outraged society and to none will this grace come so unfailingly and naturally as to him whose early training has made it second nature. In a social order so continually and rapidly changing as our own, many there must be who lack this gentle early influence and to such be it said that constant vigilance is the price of success. That the eradication of such careless habits is a great factor in worldly as well as social success is a fact too well known to require comment. That you should respect your neighbor's person as well as his property, that you should not offend his sense of fitness, that you should not ruffle his nerves or his apparel, that you should not trample his prejudices or tread his toes are cardinal points of Christian duty as well as worldly wisdom. That you are pleasing in appearance, in converse and in habit be assured has an ethical no less than a financial value.

The habit of sitting at desk with one shoulder raised far above the other in act of writing for a number of hours each day is responsible for the ill-poised shoulders of many of the younger generation. Those who spend a great portion of every day before a desk should pay strict attention to this detail as years of gymnasium training will hardly eradicate the effect of such carelessness. It is well to cultivate the ability to write with either hand interchangeably—a task not impossible of general accomplishment, though of less usual practice than should be. Few women are so negligent of their tout ensemble as to stand with the abdomen unduly prominent, but many women will sit in this posture hours at a time. This is a habit to be deprecated from a standpoint of health. It causes the muscles of the lower back and abdomen to lose elasticity, it encourages the superfluous flesh of the corpulent to roll up in unsightly wads about the hips to say nothing of twisting the stays out of shape and sagging the skirt in an unsightly fashion. Sit squarely, well back on your chair with your shoulder blades resting easily upon a moderately straight back. If the middle part of the back wearies, place a small pillow between your back and the chair above the waist line. Our grandmothers were taught the habit of erect carriage and many daintily erect little ladies of the generation agone come to mind in proof of the lasting effect of such training. So well trained have these muscles been in pliant youth that old age finds them continuing from habit what a younger generation finds almost impossible of accomplishment.

Possibly the most egregious error in carriage is sagging unevenly in the hips. Bethink yourself and when you stand, place both feet firmly on the floor and see that the muscles of the abdomen hold the body evenly poised.

Sitting With Knees Crossed—An Inelegant Attitude.

Rounded Shoulders Are Ugly and Cramp the Lungs.

The knees may be allowed to relax a trifle, but the pronounced sagging of one hip with a corresponding uplifting of the opposite portion of the body is a fruitful cause of many internal displacements. Those whose duties require them to be on foot many hours of the day unconsciously resort to many expedients to rest, but apart from the unsightliness of this position the ill effect upon the general health cannot be too forcibly presented. Why not build up a high seat while ironing or stirring the bubbling apple butter kettle or when manipulating the churn. Many women reject this expedient as a species of laziness, but this is far from being the case. It is not necessary to use the whole strength of the body to drive a tack. There is such a thing as economy of nervous energy and physical force as well as of more material things, and she who will allow a whining child, or a creaking hinge to unnecessarily irritate the nerves is wasting herself quite as needlessly as she who expends money or time or labor on some worthless trifle.

THE SEASONABLE SALAD.

SUMMER time is the season above all others for the various concoctions known to the housewife as "salads." Not only does this appetizing dish admit of ready and economical preparation, but the markets afford such a tempting array of fruit and vegetable for her selection that the natural born cook must needs feels a pricking of the fingers and an unconquerable desire to show her prowess in this line of endeavor. A few general rules should be followed and beyond this the fancy of the cook should have free scope.

All greens used should stand for at least 30 minutes in ice water, before they are carefully washed to free them from dust and insects; and as, if any water is allowed to remain on the leaves, the dressing will not adhere to them, but will run to the bottom of the salad bowl, they should be carefully freed from moisture by swinging them in a wire basket or carefully dried without bruising in a clean napkin. The beauty and wholesomeness of a perfectly prepared salad, especially at this season of the year, should commend itself to every provident housekeeper, as the salts necessary for the good condition of the blood are bountifully contained in these green vegetables. The addition of a dressing composed of pure olive oil, a few drops of lemon juice and a light seasoning of salt, garlic and pepper, furnish an ideal way of acquiring the fatty food also required by the system.

Shad Roe and Cucumber Salad.—Cook a shad roe with one minced onion and a bay leaf in salted acidulated water for 20 minutes; remove from the fire and when cold cut into neat cubes and slices. Marinate these with French dressing, flavored with a few drops of onion juice. Add to the cubes of shad roe, thus prepared, one cup of cucumber cut into dice and six chopped olives, moistening with mayonnaise dressing. Dispose the salad upon a bed of crisp white lettuce leaves, garnishing the long side with thin slices of cucumber, and the top with sliced roe and chilis.

Celery and Pineapple Salad.—Cut stalks of blanched celery and pineapple in small pieces, and sprinkle with lemon juice, then stand in the icebox until thoroughly chilled. Mix with a white mayonnaise to which one-quarter of a cup of blanched and pounded pistachio nuts have been added. Arrange in a mound on an oblong cut glass dish, surrounded by a ring of lettuce leaves, garnishing with stars of mayonnaise and halved pistachio nuts.

Endive Salad.—Arrange a head of well-washed endive in a salad bowl, adding five radishes that have been pared and cut into dice, and four hard-cooked eggs that have been cut lengthwise into quarters. Just before serving, mix half a teaspoon of salt, a half teaspoon of paprika and six tablespoons of olive oil; when thoroughly blended, add a flavoring of tarragon vinegar; pour over the salad and toss lightly with a silver fork. Garnish with whole radishes cut to resemble flowers.

Water Cress Salad.—Dress a crisp bunch of cress with salt, pepper, paprika, oil and lemon juice, adding the grated yolks of three hard-cooked eggs; arrange in a mound on a salad platter, garnishing with the whites of the eggs cut lengthwise into eighths, and placed on the salad to simulate the petals of a flower, pressing a star of mayonnaise into the center of the petals.

Green Peas and Veal Salad.—A delicious salad is made by cutting a cup of cold veal into dice, to which is added a cup of cooked and seasoned peas; arrange in individual lettuce cups, sprinkling well with celery salt, and pour over a French dressing, highly flavored with mint and mustard. Garnish with capers and tiny cucumber pickles.

Cauliflower and Beet Salad.—Boil a head of cauliflower in a piece of fine cheesecloth, until tender. Remove from the fire and break into flowerets, sprinkling with a tablespoon of lemon juice. When cold, arrange neatly in a dish, adding two tablespoons of cold boiled beets cut into dice, a tablespoon of chopped parsley and a teaspoon of finely minced wild sorrel. Mix them lightly with a French dressing, and garnish the base of the salad with a border of boiled carrots and beets, cut into fancy shapes.

INVALID COOKERY.

Grape Foam.—Put in a sherbet-glass two tablespoons of grape juice; add to this the white of one egg, beaten stiff, a little scraped ice, and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Serve at once without stirring. Simple, nutritious, and delicious.

Egg Lemonade.—One egg; one or two tablespoons sugar; juice of half to one lemon; one cup of milk. Beat egg till lemon-colored and thick; add sugar and beat again; add lemon juice and beat again; add milk and beat again. Pour into delicate glass, grate nutmeg over the top, and serve. If the stomach is very delicate use the white of the egg only.

Gelatine jellies are akin to broths and soups, and are quite as valuable. Flavored with fresh fruit juices or wine they are excellent, but do not give coffee jelly to an invalid, as the action between tannin and gelatine is similar to that between tannin and milk. Pineapple juice may be used to advantage in cases of sore throat; it is said to assist in removing the membrane in croup or diphtheria. Grape fruit seems to be specially pleasing to those suffering from "la grippe," and to have some medicinal effect as well.

For predigesting starchy foods use pancreatin or takadiastase; for predigesting meats, milk, or eggs use pepsin. All of these can be had at the drug stores, and directions for their use come with them. The addition of malt flour to gruels, mushes, bread, etc., makes them easy of assimilation. Rennet, liquid or in tablet form, may be used to make a custard without eggs. Recipes come with the rennet also.

Eggs should never be boiled, but should be cooked at a temperature about 40 degrees below the boiling point of water. This is best accomplished in this way: Into a pint of water in a small saucepan drop an egg, cover closely and remove at once from heat. The water, which should be boiling when the egg is put into it, will be immediately cooled somewhat by the egg. By experiment, find out just how long to leave it in the water to suit the taste of the patient. It is somewhat cooked at the end of six minutes, but will be more like the ordinary boiled egg after nine minutes. In either case the white of the egg will be found tender and jellyline. Open gently, drop upon toast, and it will seem as if poached.

SOME TRIED RECIPES.

Chocolate Sponge Cake.—Melt four ounces of unsweetened chocolate over hot water, add a cupful of powdered sugar, a cupful of milk and stir until smooth. Beat the yolks of four eggs and a cupful of powdered sugar until very light, using a wire egg-beater, add the hot chocolate mixture and continue beating. Flavor with vanilla, fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of eggs and last a heaping cupful of flour mixed with a level tablespoonful of baking powder. Bake in a sheet or in layers. This is particularly fine made in two layers. Spread the following icing between the layers and on top of the cake:

Butter the inside of a granite saucepan, add a cupful and a half of sugar and half a cupful of rich new milk. Cook to the soft-ball stage, then take from the fire, flavor with vanilla, add half a cupful of chopped pecan meats and stir till creamy. The nuts may be omitted for plain icing.

White Sponge Cake.—Beat the whites of 10 eggs until foamy, add half a level teaspoonful of cream of tartar and beat until dry. Gradually add a cupful and a quarter of sugar, vanilla to flavor and last fold in a cupful of flour. Bake in a moderate oven either as a loaf or in a sheet.

To make Sunshine Cake, follow the same rule, using orange flavoring instead of vanilla, and just before the flour is added fold in the yolks of six eggs, beaten until very light.

Aniseseed Cake.—To any of the plain sponge cake mixtures add a teaspoonful of aniseseed that has been carefully cleaned and freed from stems. Bake in a loaf and dust with powdered sugar when done.

For a delicious chocolate loaf cover the hollowed cake inside and out with a chocolate frosting and fill as above with whipped cream.—Amelia Sulzbacher, in the Delineator.

CHILDREN AND THE SERVANTS.

IN THE ante-bellum days the well-brought-up children of conscientious slave-owners were forbidden to speak rudely to the negro servants. "It is cowardly to be impertinent to persons who have no right to answer back!" was the principle enforced.

That principle has apparently fallen into disuse. The passer-by in the public parks where the children of the well-to-do congregate may see exercised by the young lords and ladies upon their nurses a tyranny which might well make the victims wish that they had been "born little slaves to labor in the sun." The same passer-by, if he chooses to listen for it, may hear bestowed upon the nominal guardians of the happy infants "a nice derangement of epithets" which might have been accumulated in the worst slum district of the city.

The champions of the oppressed and down-trodden are constantly arising to testify to the iniquity of the nurse-maids. The paragraphs about the bonne and the sergent de ville or the park policeman or Tommy Atkins are too old and too well beloved by the comic papers and by the public to be endangered by the suggestion that there is anything to be said on the other side. That the shield has two sides cannot be gainsaid, however, by anyone who has taken the trouble to walk around it and seek for the reverse.

If attention is called especially to the treatment accorded nurses by children in the public parks, it is because this is the easiest opportunity offered by observing both, and also because here the youngsters are free from parental supervision, and in the liberty of fresh air and playtime follow their own sweet will. If one did not know that even careful home training is sloughed off in the animation of frolic and freedom, one would fancy that the young barbarians at play had never been subject to any restraining influence, any gentling precept. For in their guileless sports they not only refuse to submit to control, but repel it with an acerbity of manner, a flow of "langwidge" which are as much out of place with velvet pelisses and fine white linen sailor suits as billingsgate at a pink tea.

Even if the unfortunate maids were celestial visitants, instead of mere vertebrate animals, they could hardly keep their trailing clouds of glory untarnished in such association. The most hysterical non-interventionist and peace-extension crank can hardly blame the nurse, under orders to have her charge at home by a certain time, when she waxes vigorous in manner at her inability to control by plea or threat the infant in her care. The mother without sin of temper should hesitate to cast the first stone at the servant who boldly gathers up the kicking and screaming child, whom no amount of coaxing and commanding will induce to leave her play and go home, even when the street lamps are being lighted.

Fortunately olive oil was never so cheap as today, and the California supply promises to make it possible for the poorest families soon to use it for ordinary culinary purposes. The prejudice against the domestic oil is founded chiefly upon the fear of substitutes. Cottonseed oil and sunflower oil may in some instances be substituted to some extent for the genuine olive oil, but one can easily find out brands that are not adulterated.

The natural oil of nuts is, if anything, more nutritious and beneficial than that of the olives. There are few people who do not like nuts, and their use is constantly increasing in this country. A few nuts eaten every day would be beneficial to all. Children should be encouraged to eat them at the table, and instead of candy and other sweets between meals they should be given nuts. Have them on hand at all times, and the children will indulge freely in them. Old people would find their health materially improved if they ate more freely of nuts. People with failing teeth will give up eating nuts for fear of cracking their teeth, but this is a mistake. If nothing else, have the nuts ground up so they can be used without much chewing.

FOR THE SUMMER WARDROBE

A General Utility Dancing or Dinner Dress—The Popular Shirt Waist Suit—Warm Weather Evening Wraps—Suggestions for Summer Mourning Gowns.

WHEN a maiden has but a limited income and contemplates a round of visits which comprises a gay time by the sea and one quite as attractive in the mountains, she naturally has to have in her wardrobe a standby gown, fit for any occasion of dining or dancing, and one that will not need refurbishing for every event. Illustration No. 1 gives a dainty frock of cream chiffon cloth and cream repousse lace, and is a hint worthy to be taken as the two combined will last the owner through the season as successfully as her indestructible doll lasted in her earlier days. The foundation, of course, is white bow, and a little rosette is tucked away above the top one. The girdle is of shot pink taffeta and is very high and tightly drawn. Little straps trim, lacing across small rhinestone buttons.

Nothing is more refreshing to the eye on a warm day than a pretty girl daintily clad in a fresh white frock, and white in all materials is seen in the shirtwaist suit. Looking back for a few seasons brings a wondering as to why these dresses were not always worn, and also thanks to the athletic girl for bravely insisting upon shorter skirts for the links and tennis courts. Three inches above the ground is not too short, in fact, hardly short enough for deep dust or dewy grass, and this is considered the standard length for the summer suits. White lawn is the material used in the model illustrated in figure 2 and the skirt is in seven breadths but slightly gored and with three two-inch tucks run at even distances. The fullness at waistline is in plaits stitched down on edges to give the effect of a graduated yoke, with box plait at front. The waist has yoke at front and back extending over top of sleeves, and outlined by rows of stitching which continue along shoulder seam. Below the yoke at back the groups of tucks are full length from under tabs, at front and on sleeves three inches is the length at which they stop. A flat collar buttons high over the usual stock at front and is stitched to waist at lower edge, ending in dovetail points at top of front box plait. Pearl buttons fasten front and cuffs. The belt is a narrow strap of white leather. A petticoat to be worn with any of these dresses should come to the middle of the hem, otherwise when the wearer stands with the sunlight behind her a discrepancy is most apparent. The fad for hatless rides and walks is on the wane and in its stead the lingerie hat reigns supreme. Most becoming, too, are these dainty bits of headgear, when the edge of brim and crown are finished with a frill of lace, and with a white or pale pink ribbon tied around the crown in a wide looped bow at front, and two little roses tucked away under the brim toward the back in a color to match the effect is charmingly youthful. Easily made they are, too, only a wire frame, wide brimmed with low, small crown and some mousseline to be shirred at each wire around; either with a tuck or plain, and this any clever girl can surely do.

ILLUSTRATION NO. 3.

Summer evening wraps and cloaks are even more bewitchingly lovely this year than those used during the past winter. But as their main object is to form a beautiful frame to the dainty lace gown and fair wearer little thought is given to the question of warmth.

For a debutante a simple cloak model should be selected, such as one of white etamine or pongee, lined with India silk of the same color or of a delicate rose pink shade, and made with a round yoke to which the skirts are gathered or sun plaited. The sleeves should correspond and the neck, fronts and yoke should be bordered by full ruffles of white chiffon or mousseline.

Illustration No. 3 shows an exquisite coat of a much more elaborate model. It is of champagne colored chiffon taffeta and is made with full gathered skirts, tucked at the bottom and enormously big puffed sleeves ending in three full ruffles.

Around the shoulders is draped a beautiful cape with long stole ends extending down the fronts of fine Irish lace, lined with seagreen Liberty satin, and rosettes of the same with opal centers fasten the cape on either side.

Three-piece suits are smart for traveling; for wear on hot days it is safer to carry a coat than to be without one when going from one locality to another, for our weather is so changeable that even after a short journey one may find a difference in temperature of from 30 to 40 degrees, and if a coat is to be worn or carried it is better to have it match the gown than to be of different material or color.

The pretty dress illustrated in Figure 4 is of dark blue poplin and is intended for a street or house dress in town or an afternoon dress in the country. It is made with a full gored skirt gathered over cords to form a hip yoke and cut in points at the bottom, below which is a full gathered ruffle. The bodice is likewise shirred over cords to about the bust line and the full sleeves are gathered at the top to an equal depth. The neck is cut in V-shape, and is filled in with dark blue chiffon tucked horizontally and the belt is of soft taffeta sash ribbon boned and pointed in front and tied at the back with long ends.

Mourning clothes for summer wear are much more difficult to select than those for cold weather, for there are comparatively very few thin black materials with a lustreless finish.

Fortunately much more latitude is now allowed these in mourning than in the past, and white is being worn, even by those in deepest mourning, to a great extent.

Nun's veiling is the most appropriate mourning material, though pongee and crepe de chine are also used, but as these last two materials are so universally worn they do not seem as suitable for mourning gowns as nun's veiling for this, in black, is rarely used for any other purpose.

The accompanying illustration, No. 5, shows a simple but extremely smart mourning costume. The gown is of a fine quality of nun's veiling and is made with a full skirt, laid in plaits at the belt, and trimmed at about the knees by two encircling bands of English crepe. The bodice has full gathered surplice fronts, and full puffed sleeves finished by tight-fitting cuffs of peau de soie and the pointed girdle is of the same silk. Running around the waist and, also the sleeves, are two bands of crepe and crepe bands ending in points cover the shoulder seams.

ILLUSTRATION NO. 5.

The hat is of black chiffon laid in tiny folds and it is trimmed by a scarf of crepe with ends that fall down the back to the waist line, and over this is worn a net veil with a crepe border.

For thinner gowns black silk, mull and lawn may be used, but they should be trimmed only by tucks or gathers, and with them the regular white hemstitched mourning collars and cuffs should be worn.

THE WARM WEATHER NEGLIGEE

Some of the Best and Newest Styles in Matinees and Kimonos. Elaborate Robes in Embroidered Silks From Japan. Models Made by the Home Seamstress.

By CATHERINE HOWARD.

Specially Designed and Drawn for The Gazette Home Journal and Exclusive With This Publication.

INCLUDED under the name of negligee are all the lounging robes, dressing gowns, tea gowns, combing jackets, and matinees, et cetera, and in these comfortable and dainty little garments, the most attractive styles are put forth for summer wear.

The wash robes and dressing sacks are shown in charming variety, but the thin India and China silks, crepes and silk mulls are also extremely popular and are in many instances so made they are easily laundered. The thin Indias and the wash silks are usually made with insertions and ruffles of wash laces, either Valenciennces, fine Cluny or net lace, though some of the most expensive robes are entirely trimmed with hand work in embroidered designs. One very beautiful little jacket of this sort was shown, the material being pale blue Chinese silk. The jacket was cut longer in the front, two points extending well down below the waist line, but shorter at the back and sides, The sleeves were almost plain at the armhole, but loose and full about the lower part, and made open, somewhat in kimono fashion. The entire jacket was finished by a fagoted hem of the crepe and about the lower part of the sleeves and around the neck and down the fronts of the jacket a graceful design of pond lilies and leaves, done in pale blue embroidery silk, was arranged. This garment was also guaranteed as washable, though one would hesitate in plunging such an exquisite little furbelow into "suds and water." Another pretty jacket in the same style was of white crepe, bound with green and embroidered in water lilies in the natural coloring, and an unusually attractive matinee was of pink crepe, decorated in shaded pink roses and in foliage of soft gray greens. Other very dressy and likewise expensive sacks were in hand painted silks inlet with a little fine white lace about the collar and in the corners of the fronts, but these are only suitable for very special occasions and one could hardly term them "lounging jackets." More practical are the simple little kimono jackets of flowered or plain colored silk, finished with a band border of some contrasting color or of white. One very smart little jacket of this sort was in figured crepe in a design of purple wisteria on a white ground, the edges of the jacket and sleeves being bordered by a deep band of the satin in the deepest shade of the wisteria.

Rather newer than the kimono jackets are the smocked and shirred models in soft wash silks, trimmed with lace, and the kerchief jackets, made of large handkerchiefs gayly decorated, are much in vogue. This kerchief style is also a very good one for a combing jacket, made of big bordered silk handkerchiefs, with long points front and back and over the shoulders. Many of these little jackets are not intended to fasten in front, but are merely slipped on as a protection for the neck and arms.

The accordion-pleated robes and matinees are lovely in the soft silks and crepes, but will not stand hard wear, and cannot be pressed and freshened up when mussed as will a plain material. There is no denying the grace and becomingness of these sun-plaited and accordion-plaited robes, however, and for the receiving of informal visits and such uses, they are charming.

The long robes and dressing gowns are shown in all styles, from the bath gown to the much befrilled tea gown, and some of the lingerie robes, covered with fine hand work and laces and trimmed with knots and bows of delicately colored ribbons almost equal in price an imported frock. The pelerine collar is introduced on many of the negligees and affords an opportunity for effective trimming, and the wide rounded or square cape collars are also frequently seen.

Among the simpler styles, are the gowns of fine lawn, or dimity, decorated in dainty little flower designs, which are so becoming and comfortable as hot weather boudoir robes. All of these robes, jackets and lounging gowns are made, by the way, without any attempt at fitting, unless it is about the neck and shoulders, but fall in loose full lines from the bust, without in the least defining the curve of the waist. The empire style, always so well suited to the boudoir gown, is a favorite model, and is shown in the thin summer silks and crepes as well as in the wash materials. Many of those seen are further trimmed by a scarf or girdle of soft silk or ribbon loosely drawn under the arms and knotted at the bust line in front.

Among the most inexpensive of lounging garments are the robes of striped or crinkled cotton crepe in light pink, blue or lavendar, and if becomingly made these simple little robes are most attractive. Many of the models seen are made in the ever popular kimono style, the edges bound with satin ribbon or bands of silk, but these are too familiar to need description. A dainty boudoir gown is always a necessity, but particularly so at the summer hotel, and a good model for such wear and one that may be readily slipped on if occasion demands is of blue and white wash silk, made with a large sailor collar trimmed with a deep frill of lace and two light-blue taffeta streamers which may be tied at the throat.

Another rather more dressy gown which is, however, made very much in the same fashion, is of pink and white wash silk, with a deep lace collarette about the shoulders, through which black velvet ribbon half an inch in width was threaded, falling in loops and ends on each side of the front.

The first design among the sketches shows a lingerie boudoir gown of white mercerized muli, made in Empire style. The upper part was made in the fashion of a deep yoke of alternate strips of fine tucking and insertion of real Valenciennes.

The tops of the sleeves were also of the tucking and insertion and little pointed tabs of the lace were set in at intervals below the lowest row of lace both on the sleeves and the gown itself. The sleeves were very large and full and were trimmed below the elbow by two bands of lace with a strip of tucking between, a fitted cuff being the finish at the hand. The lower part of the robe had a gathered flounce, headed by a wide band of the insertion and tucking.

The second gown was of white wash crepe, trimmed with white crepe bands figured in green. The novelty of the gown consisted in a sort of stole cape, which extended over the tops of the sleeves in a rounded cap, and down the front in long pointed stole ends. The cape extended across the back in rounded yoke fashion and was fastened in front with a braided clasp in green and white. The robe itself was simply shirred to a round flat yoke over which the cape fell, and was otherwise without trimming.

The third robe shown among the drawings was of crocus yellow India silk, made somewhat on the surplice order, the large square collar fastening on one side under a bow of ribbon, of the same shade as the silk. This ribbon was run under box pleats of the silk, being threaded through buttonholed slits, arranged about the robe just under the arms. The sailor collar was edged with lace and insertion, below which fell a deep gathered frill of lace to match.

The fourth sketch shows two little dressing jackets, the first one at the left being of pale pink silk, run in fine tucks by hand and attached to a yoke of white and pink Cluny lace. The fronts of the jacket were pointed and edged with the lace, headed by a Cluny beading in which was threaded narrow pink ribbon. The sleeves were pointed at the outer arm and were also edged with the lace and beading, and around the lower part of the jacket and inside the flowing sleeves were accordion-pleated frills of the pink silk.

The next drawing shows a little jacket of white Paris muslin and lace. The upper part was in the shape of a rounded yoke of alternate puffs of lace and lawn, with a frill of lace edging as a finish. The jacket was made open at the neck in V-shape, and fastened with a bow of pale blue wash ribbon. The sleeves were in elbow length, and were of alternate rows of puffs and insertion, and were finished by a deep frill of gathered muslin edged with lace. The fronts of the jackets were cut rounding and were also trimmed by the insertion between puffs of the material, the entire edge being finished by a frill of the gathered lace.

In discussing these lingerie modes a new idea in the making of lace yokes and trimmings is the use of lace edging fagoted together in the same way as the insertion so much seen. The plain edge or rather the top of the lace is gathered slightly and fagoted to the scalloped edge of the lace, the thread not being taken exactly into the edge, but just above it so the scallop slightly overlaps the fagoting stitch.

Many of these negligee garments described are to be found ready made in the shops, but unless the most expensive kinds are chosen the work is seldom as fine as it should be, the charm of these gowns lying almost entirely in the daintiness of the workmanship. Among the imported gowns exquisite boudoir robes may be bought, but these are, of course, more or less high in price, and a clever seamstress can make such a gown for a fourth of the cost of a ready-made one, with probably better results as to fit and finish.

Many of the smaller shops which keep oriental embroideries and such articles, make a specialty of the real Japanese kimono, of delicately shaded silks, embroidered in gorgeous designs of wisteria, iris, cherry blossoms, chrysanthemums and butterflies, but though these garments are most attractive, they are best suited to only the picturesque woman, though the simpler kimono styles may be worn by almost anyone.

The Pierrot robe, with its huge tasseled outer sleeve folding back in monkish fashion over wide white ruffled frills, which also fluff about the throat, is one of the newest departures in boudoir gowns and charmingly becoming it is, especially to a youthful wearer.

As to the foot gear appropriate with negligee costume, the colored leathers are much in vogue, and the most entrancing little slippers are shown in red, green and all the lighter colors as well as in bronze, gilt or silver. The little low-cut white canvas pumps are also very smart, and possess the advantage of being easily cleaned. The majority of these low shoes are finished by a large ribbon bow or rosette across the front, though the fancy strapped slippers and beaded and embroidered styles are much liked. Pale gray suede is also very modish, worn, of course, with silk stockings to match.

Q. Will you kindly tell me how to pronounce "Lux Crucis," by Samuel M. Gardenhire? Another thing on which I ask your advice is the proper way of wearing the black band on your arm. As I cannot afford mourning would it be proper to wear a band with white shirt waists? How long should it be worn and is it necessary to have the band of crepe? Does this seem the proper thing to do that is solemn, and not too much of a fad?—K. B.

A. The mourning bands are perfectly correct and good form. They are worn on the jacket sleeve rather than on the blouse. Possibly if the expense is not too great, you had better wear a black skirt and white waists with black tie and belt with black hat and gloves. There is something very incongruous to my way of thinking in bright colored clothing and a mourning band—it seems to me to suggest that you would mourn if it were not too much trouble, a poor compromise as it were between your wishes and your sense of propriety. The band is worn from one to three months, and black and white for the same length of time. The material used for these bands is some dull finish black—generally crepe de chine of a heavy quality. The title you give is pronounced L-u-ks Cru-sis using a long "u" as in "Duke."

Q. I have been interested in reading your column and perhaps you can give me some advice on this matter. I am a married man and there is a girl in this town who likes me very much. She is about nineteen, and I am seven years her senior. Now, my wife does not know anything about this, for I would not tell her. She knows this young lady and speaks of her and is on pretty good terms with her. When this lady meets me with my wife, she speaks to my wife but not to me, but if we meet each other alone she will stop and talk to me. I have asked her why she does this and she says maybe your wife would object to my speaking to you. I have met her at dances and danced with her, but she refused to let me go home, but she said it was not because she did not want to go home with me. What am I to do? If she continues people will talk. In the evening when we meet accidentally and I tease her about her beau, she will say, so sad, that I must not say that for she will never marry anyone but me. Then I say, "My dear child I am married." She told me once it would have been better if we had never met. I pity the poor girl and hate to hurt her feelings. What do you think I had best do?—MARRIED MAN.

A. It seems to me any man with any honor or sense of what was due his family would not ask such a futile question. The girl in the case is either very silly or is making a goose of you. If you do not wish to make yourself a laughing stock for the neighborhood or involve the the girl as well as your wife in unpleasant scandal, you had better drop this young woman's acquaintance altogether. The girl may find your credulity amusing, but your wife should she hear of it, would hardly be likely to take a good-natured view of the matter.

Q. Will you please tell me which is the newest way to head a letter

Pittsburgh, Pa.,
May 17, 1904.

Dear Friend—

or to just commence "Dear Friend," etc., and place the date at the close of letter? I think the latter is all right for a short note, but for a letter I think the former is best? Will you kindly inform me which is best form?—ANZIE BELL.

A. It is quite immaterial which form you use for a letter. The first form you give is the one always used in commercial correspondence, although it is perfectly proper also in a social way. Personally, I prefer the latter with the date line at the left-hand side of the last page, below the signature. It is the English custom to date the letter on the first page and repeat the address on the last page at the left-hand side as "To Mr. John Brown, London, E. C." These are really very small matters and little regarded in social correspondence. If your stationery is smooth and unlined, very delicately tinted, if tinted at all, the ink black and the sheet clean and orderly your notes will pass without comment. There is quite an art in letter writing, and if you succeed in answering correspondents promptly and in making your epistles natural and entertaining much else will be forgiven you.

Q. Kindly answer the following question in Sunday's issue of The Gazette. A certain young man called upon a young lady for the first time to spend the evening with her. During the evening another young lady called unexpectedly, who had never met the young man before. When this young lady suggested going home, which was after 10 o'clock, was it proper for the young man to take the young lady home or was it not. If it was the proper thing for him to take her home, should he have asked the young lady upon whom he called to accompany them? Kindly answer explicitly the above question and greatly oblige.—Z. Q. DAN.

A. In the first place the appearance of the second young lady was very inapropos. When she arrived and discovered her friend entertaining other company, with whom she was unacquainted, she should have taken an almost immediate departure. It would have been very easy to offer some light excuse, as she had just called for an address, or to get a book, or some such trifle and allowed her friend the uninterrupted pleasure of her evening. However, since the second girl was so tactless as to obtrude herself, there was nothing for the young man to do but offer to take her home when so late an hour was reached. The second girl might also have asked the hostess if she, too, would walk around, or the hostess might have offered to accompany them, or indeed, the man might have proposed that they all walk around, especially if he wanted a few moments conversation with his hostess alone. However, had I been hostess I would not have proposed accompanying them unless I felt convinced that the second girl was trying to tease or outgeneral me. In that event I would have had much pleasure in seeing that she got home safely, that she had very little opportunity to shine in conversation and also in showing her that she had not succeeded in disconcerting me in the least. In these small social matters a great deal depends upon circumstances. If the girl happened in accidentally and was merely slow in appreciation of what was proper, it was the hostess's duty to make the best of it. Of course, the hostess would have to ask her to stay even if she did not wish to do so. From the man's standpoint, there was but one thing for him to do and that was to see that his hostess' friend was taken home under safe escort.

[Editor's Note.—"F. W. R." asked in a former issue for the poem, "The Fatal Rose of Red," which is given below, as is also "Casey at the Bat," a recitation which was requested by "Marie." We wish to thank "M. A. B." for this contribution to the column.]

"Please wear a red rose, Uncle," a maid said with delight,
Unto an aged man, with bowed down head;
"I cannot, child," he answered, "but I'll wear one of white,
My hopes were shattered by a rose of red."

"You see I had a sweetheart once, a singer on the stage,
In anger from her side, one night I fled.
Time proved I deeply wronged her, so, repenting jealous rage,
I wrote a note to her one day, which read:

CHORUS:

Wear a rose of white, when you sing tonight,
It'll mean you'll forgive me again;
But if instead I see a rose of red,
I'll know that my hopes are in vain.
And I never knew that she loved me true
Till my dreams of the future all fled;
When, instead of the white, she wore that night
The fatal rose of red.

When she appeared that night, child, that singer young and fair,
I thought that all her love for me was dead.
I saw a crimson rosebud pinned in her golden hair;
One glance told all, and from the place I fled.

I journeyed far; in after years returned—she'd passed away.
She thought me false. It broke her heart, they said.
I also learned a rival had changed my note to read—
"If you be true, then wear a rose of red."

CASEY AT THE BAT.

It looked exceeding gloomy for the Mudville nine that day,
The score stood two to four with but an inning left to play;
So when Cooney died at second, and Borrowes did the same
A pallor wreathed the features of the patrons of the game.

A haggard few got up to go, leaving there the rest
With that hope which springs eternal within the human breast,
For they thought "If only Casey could get a whack at that We'd put up even money still with Casey at the bat."

But Flynn preceded Casey, and likewise so did Blake,
And the former was a "pudden" and the latter was a fake,
So on that stricken multitude a deathlike silence sat
For there seemed but little hope of Casey getting to the bat.

But Flynn let drive a single, to the wonderment of all,
And the much-despised Blakey tore the cover off the ball,
And when the dust had lifted, and they saw what had occurred,
There was Blakey safe at second, and Flynn a-hugging third.

Then from that mighty multitude went up a joyous yell,
It rattled on the mountain top, it rumbled in the dell
It struck upon the hillside, and rebounded from the flat,
For Casey, mighty Casey, was advancing to the bat.

There was ease in Casey's manner as he stepped into his place;
There was pride in Casey's bearing, and a smile on Casey's face;
And, when responding to the cheers, he lightly doffed his cap,
No stranger in that crowd could doubt 'twas Casey at the bat.

Ten thousand eyes were on him as he rubbed his hands with dirt,
Five thousand tongues applauded when he wiped them on his shirt.
Then while the writhing pitcher ground the ball into his hip,
Defiance glanced in Casey's eye—a sneer curled Casey's lip.

And now the leathern covered sphere came hurtling through the air,
And Casey stood a-watching it in haughty grandeur there;
Close by the sturdy batsman the ball unheeded sped.
"That ain't my style," said Casey; "Strike one" the umpire said.

From the benches black with people there went up a muffled roar
Like the beating of the storm waves on a stern and distant shore;
"Kill him! Kill the umpire" shouted someone on the stand,
And it's likely they'd have killed him, had not Casey raised his hand.

With a smile of Christian charity, great Casey's visage shown,
He stilled the rising tumult, he bade the game go on;
He signaled to the pitcher and once more the spheriod flew,
But Casey still ignored it, and the umpire said "Strike two!"

"Fraud!" cried the maddened thousands, and the echo answered "Fraud!"
But a scornful look from Casey, and the audience was awed.
They saw his face grow stern and cold. They saw his muscles strain
And they knew that Casey wouldn't let that ball go by again.

The sneer is gone from Casey's lips, his teeth are clenched in hate;
He pounds with cruel violence his bat upon the plate;
And now the pitcher holds the ball, and now he lets it go,
And now the air is shattered by the force of Casey's blow.

Oh, somewhere in this favored land the sun is shining bright,
The band is playing somewhere and somewhere hearts are light;
And somewhere men are laughing, and somewhere children shout;
But there is no joy in Mudville—mighty Casey has struck out.

Q. I have a very deep regard for a young lady with whom I have been acquainted but a short time. I would like very much to call upon her at her home, but there is now a young man visiting her and I do not know whether it would be proper for me to ask her permission to visit her? Will you kindly advise me what to do in next Sunday's Gazette.—H. D. A.

A. There is no reason why you should not ask your lady friend for permission to call. If she is committed to the other man, of course, she may not encourage your addresses, but then they may be just everyday friends, and the lady might welcome your friendship. A girl usually asks a man to call if she wishes to pursue the acquaintance, but there would be nothing out of the way in your suggesting a call if you are particularly interested.

Q. As I am a reader of The Sunday Gazette and take great interest in your counsel, I would be a thousand times obliged for some advice. I would like to know what make of corset to wear to make my figure neat. What make will give me an erect form and make me hold my shoulders back. I can wear nineteen or twenty. Should I wear hose supporters and what make is good? There are so many kinds I do not know which to get. Also I would be much obliged if you would tell me what would be nice in black for jacket or Eton for cool evenings, as I do not care for silk. Something that would be nice enough to wear with any dress, as I can have but one jacket. Is there any powder I could get at druggists to keep down perspiration?—GRACE.

A. The preference nowadays is for an extra long corset below the waist and a very short one above the waist line. This gives a trim slender appearance to the hips and the effect of a low, rather straight bust line. Do not wear any pad in the back of your skirts unless you are unusually flat. The size you mention is very small for a healthy woman, and I would not advise you to try anything too small. A great deal depends upon the way you lace your stays. Do you use two laces, tying one three eyes above the waist line and leaving these ends loose to pull up as you may wish. Commence another lacer below the waist and tie this at the end as tight as you wish it. If you do not wish to buy supporters, you can buy gum elastic and safety pins. Fasten the elastic to the front tip of your corset on either side and pin to your stocking with a safety, then fasten two more pieces to the corset just back of the hip bone and pin this to the back of your stocking. In this way you will not only find your hose wrinkleless, but the supporters will hold your corset down. The make of your corset will, of course, depend largely upon what you wish to pay for them. A very good corset can be had for a dollar, and it is better to buy white, as these will not look unsightly through summer clothing. As to a jacket—how would you like a tan jacket. These are very stylish and go well with any color of skirt or with summer dresses. If you are going to buy a jacket, do not get an Eton without you have a skirt to match. A coat that will reach ten inches below the waist is far better style for a separate wrap, this season and will be even more so next year. You need not get your jacket very light in color, and I think you can get them unlined. A plain tailored coat without trimming except possibly stitched straps and with plain coat sleeves of ordinary width is the best style. These coats can be had in black also, but you will find black more expensive than the same quality in colors. Also for young people they are not as dressy as tan. If you are troubled with perspiration, Talcum powder is good after bathing. Have you tried using a little common baking soda in the wash water for the trouble you mention. To my mind there is nothing so good as a daily bath. Perspiration in itself is really not objectionable—it is perspiration that has been allowed to remain on the body until stale and sour that is malodorous.

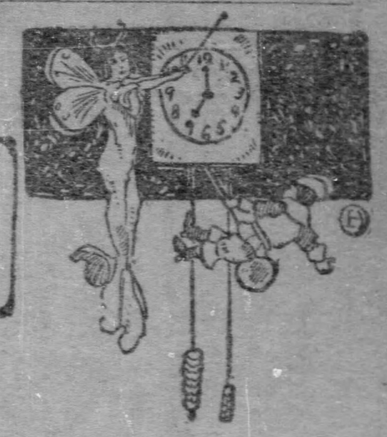
Q. I wish you would publish the words of the poem "Under the Blue and the Gray," or if you cannot find this please publish the song "While the Shots and Shells Were Screaming." This is a very old song and I will thank you for your kindness.—F. E. B.

A. Will some of our readers familiar with war songs kindly send the words of either or both of these songs.

Q. Will you please tell me what is the latest way for a young girl to wear her hair, both back and front. Is a "rat" proper and where can they be had. Also is it better to curl the hair on heated tongs or on curl papers. I have long hair that is very straight and my mother does not want me to cut any of it. If you can tell me how to put it up I will be obliged.—ROSE.

A. The most acceptable arrangement of the hair for a young girl is in a braid which should then be tied up at the back of the head and fastened securely with rubber pins. Double bows of ribbon are sometimes used if the hair is scanty and fastened with hair pins on either side of the braid close to the head. These ribbons should match your gown, but for ordinary wear black or dark blue would look well. The hair about the face may be pushed up a little with combs. If a slight pompadour is becoming, loosen the hair on the top of the head a little and shove it up with a wide comb. Sometimes a pompadour brushed to one side, rather than straight back will improve the appearance or a part either in the middle or a little to one side may prove becoming. Crimped hair is not in favor just now, nor are "rats" or in fact any artificial or elaborate style of dressing. The best thing is to wash and brush the hair thoroughly and keep it glossy and soft, but do not crimp or curl with either tongs or curlers. If you wish your hair to be fluffy you might separate it in a straight line from ear to ear and brush this part forward, then twist it up in a firm knot over night. In the morning the hair will be found sufficiently wavy for any style of dressing. If your hair is inclined to be greasy or heavy, wash it frequently and use plenty of invisible pins or combs to keep it in order. It is not good style to use three or four of the fancy gilded and trimmed combs in the back of the hair. If you can afford a real tortoise shell comb that is good. Otherwise use good plain rubber combs that will not be too conspicuous. Your mother is perfectly right in not wishing you to cut your hair—it would be a pity to do so in the first place, and it is not stylish to wear a "bang" now.

At Story-telling Time



How Jack and Elsie Played Make-Believe.

THERE was once a king and queen, they were brother and sister, and they had each a separate kingdom. A long time back they had tried having one between them, but that only led to quarrels, so they very sensibly decided to have one each. No one besides themselves knew that they were important royal personages. For instance, to their mother and father and nurse they were just Jack and Elsie, and they were sometimes punished and sometimes given treats, just like all other children. Jack and Elsie really enjoyed having this great secret, and it was no use telling it to anyone, for nobody but themselves understood about the kingdoms. In the evenings they used to discuss their country's affairs together, and tell each other how naughty their prime ministers had been, and sometimes after the morning's lessons Elsie used to remark casually that she had been to open parliament that day in a carriage drawn by six cream ponies. Jack never looked surprised at this, though he knew she had been sitting opposite to him all the morning trying to get her sums right, and as there was a great deal of friendly rivalry between the two sovereigns, he would say that his parliament didn't open till next week, but that when it did he was going to be driven down by twelve white ponies.

In fact, Jack and Elsie thought so much about their kingdoms that after a time they hardly knew whether they were a king and queen playing at being children, or children pretending to be king and queen. If you ever play at make-believe and get very much in earnest over it you'll understand that.

Well, one day their majesties had been sent to bed early for some reason or other, and instead of being sorry for whatever wrong they had done, they felt cross and rebellious because they were punished.

After kicking and tossing for half an hour or so, Jack looked up and spoke in a loud whisper:

"Are you 'wake, Elsie?"

"Yes," came Elsie's voice from the little bed in the other corner.

"Then let's get up and go and find the kingdoms."

"But where are they, and how can we get out?" asked Elsie.

"Oh, they must be somewhere," said Jack vaguely. "And we can easily get out. Father and mother are not at home, and nurse is downstairs."

Elsie did not need much persuading. It was horrid to be in bed on such a fine summer evening and it was not more than 5 o'clock and would be light for two or three hours longer.

They soon dressed themselves, fastening the difficult "behind" strings for each other. They were as quiet as little mice in their movements, and presently managed to get downstairs and out of the front door without anyone hearing them.

Once they were out of doors they saw plenty of things to interest them, and wandered on, looking at one thing and another until they came to some quite poor streets. Perhaps you know what a tenement is. A large building where ever so many poor families live, some of them having three or four rooms, some two, and some only one. The street doors of these buildings are always open and when Jack and Elsie came to one of them they peeped inside. There were heaps of children about, playing, talking and screaming, and they ventured up some of the stairs to the first stone landing. There Jack found some boys playing a game with tops and buttons (very likely you've seen it in the street), and Elsie went to make friends with a girl of her own size who was sitting on the stairs nursing a real baby.

There was no difficulty in getting acquainted with any of the children.

They enjoyed themselves very much for nearly an hour, when the mother of some of the children they were playing with came downstairs. She saw at once that Jack and Elsie did not belong to the tenement, and by their dress that they belonged to people who were well off.

"Where do you live?" she asked Jack.

"I don't know," he answered, still busily engaged with a top someone had lent him.

"Don't you know your address?" she asked again. But he didn't remember it, and Elsie didn't either.

The woman asked the children a lot more questions and Jack told her how they had been sent to bed and had gone out without anyone knowing.

"I should take them to the police station," said another woman, who had come down by that time. "It is clear they're lost."

Jack didn't like the sound of police station and Elsie began to cry, so the first woman said:

"Come upstairs with me and have some tea and we'll see what's to be done afterward."

She whispered a moment to the other woman before she took the children up to her room, and so it happened that while they were having tea the inspector at the police station was hearing all about them, and as their father had been in only a quarter of an hour before to say they were lost, the inspector was soon able to put things right. Father and mother were down at the tenement in no time to fetch the children home, and everything ended well.

I don't believe Jack and Elsie were ever punished for going out alone, as they had. I expect their mother and father were so pleased to have them back that they forgave them.

The children quite neglect their kingdoms now. Their favorite make-believe is that they live in a tenement and they often make nurse cross by wanting to play on the landing instead of in the nursery.

Rob and the Genie.

ALL you little boys and girls remember the thrilling experience of Rob who released the Genie from the bottle, as told on this page a week or so ago. The Genie thanked Rob for releasing him, and just to show his gratitude, offered to take him a journey through the clouds to any wonderful land he liked.

"Would it take long to go to China?" asked Rob, curiously.

"Oh, two or three hours," said the Genie, as if there was nothing extraordinary in such quick traveling.

"Then I'm afraid I can't go," Rob said. "My lessons begin in half an hour, and Miss Chapman, my governess, wouldn't like to be kept waiting."

"If Miss Chapman is the only difficulty——" began the Genie, and he disappeared without finishing the sentence.

Rob went downstairs and got his lesson books ready, but though more than half an hour passed, Miss Chapman did not come, and at last he went to find his mother. He and she searched everywhere for the governess, but she was not to be found.

"It is most extraordinary," said Mrs. Adams Rob's mother. "Perhaps she has gone out, and you had better go and play for a little while, and you can do your lessons this afternoon, when she comes back."

But Miss Chapman did not come back in the afternoon, and everyone began to feel alarmed for her.

Rob himself suspected the Genie of having some hand in her disappearance, but he saw nothing of him, and so was unable to confirm his suspicions. In any case, the Genie was hardly a person to be mentioned to grown-up people, because they did not believe in their existence.

The next day the Genie turned up again.

"Come along," he said to Rob. "We can start at once; I've arranged that your governess shall be out of the way for a day or two, and I'm going to give you a good time."

Rob hesitated a minute. The "good time" was tempting, but he felt that his mother would never survive it if he disappeared too, even for a few hours, so he backed away from the huge figure, and asked:

"What have you done with Miss Chapman?"

"Oh," said the Genie airily. "I have shut her in a mountain cave. She's quite comfortable, though, to be sure, she seemed in a rather nervous state when left."

"Would you please fetch her back at once?" Rob said. "She'll be very frightened, and perhaps you haven't given her the right kind of food."

"Food," the Genie exclaimed. "Why, dear me, I quite forgot about leaving her anything to eat."

"How hungry she must be!" said Rob. Please do go and bring her back, and be as quick as you possibly can."

The Genie looked disappointed.

"I thought you'd be pleased, you know, to be able to go to China, and to no end of trouble in getting the lady safely away. Still, if you want her back——"

And again he went off without finishing.

That same evening Miss Chapman was found at the front door, muffled up in a kind of rug. She couldn't say what had happened to her, for she remembered nothing after she was working on the balcony till she found herself in a cold, dark cave. And after that she remembered nothing until she was found on the doorstep. The idea got about that she had been carried off by brigands and unaccountably returned, because she was too poor to pay a ransom, perhaps.

There was something about her adventure in all the evening papers in England, and when she went to London a short time afterward she was quite a heroine, and talked of her "experience." Everybody was sympathetic, and spoke of "those dreadful brigands." Only Rob knew about the Genie, and the Genie wasn't a person one could mention, as I said before.

Daisie's Birthday.

IT was Daisie's birthday. She was eight years old, and mamma had bought her a beautiful wax doll. It had blue eyes and yellow curls just like Daisie's, and the owner of it was so proud that she showed her beloved "Dollie" to all her friends.

In the afternoon mother took Daisie, with her doll, and Carlo the dog, for a picnic in the woods. It was a beautiful afternoon, and Daisie skipped along merrily under the trees. Mother found a shady spot and then told Daisie to play about near her.

The little girl played with her doll for a time and then turned to Carlo. She decorated the dog with moss and flowers, but Carlo did not like it, and scampered off, leaving his decorations on the grass. Daisie picked up her doll and rushed off in pursuit. Carlo went further and further into the wood and Daisie ran after him, and, growing impatient, dropped her doll on the grass.

The dog, after his playful scamper, at last came back to Daisie and they both went back to mother. But then a sad discovery was made—where was the doll?

Daisie searched high and low, but could not find it, and mother also joined in the search. It was of no avail, however. Dollie was not to be found, and at last they returned, Daisie weeping bitterly and mother a little displeased that Daisie had been so careless.

A week went by and nothing was heard of Dollie, but after that, one day, Carlo came in, bringing a heap of wet clothes, in which was the body of poor Dollie. How changed she was! Her former beauty was all gone and at last she had to be burnt. This sad end of her birthday doll taught Daisie a lesson. Her mother is pleased to see that she is very careful with all her toys now and I shouldn't wonder if she will not have another doll soon.

Late.

My father brought somebody up
To show us all asleep.
They came as softly up the stairs
As you could creep.

They whispered in the doorway there
And looked at us awhile.
I had my eyes shut up, but I
Could feel him smile.

I shut my eyes up close and lay
As still as I could keep;
Because I knew he wanted us
To be asleep.

Old Mother Terrible.

WHEN fairies danced, in the olden days, in the moonlight, and elves peeped out from under the mushrooms, and the fairy lamps lit up the landscape, there lived an old woman whom everyone called "Mother Terrible."

Now, one glorious summer day, when everything looked at its best, and the merry brooklet danced to the songs of the birds, the Princess Floradeena and Prince Emerald, who lived in a beautiful palace with their father and mother (the King and Queen of Toyland), were walking through the forest in search of a golden ball which the Princess Floradeena had accidentally thrown there on the previous day.

Now the old woman was sitting in her house when she saw the two children coming toward her cottage, so she thought she would go to meet them. When the princess saw her, she began to cry, and to cling to her brother for support.

"Don't cry," he said; "luckily I have my magic key, which the Queen of Fairyland gave me."

This made her tears depart, and she once more began to look cheerful.

"Come, my dears," said the old woman, "you look so tired and hungry; come in and have some food and a rest."

"No, thank you," said the prince politely.

But Mother Terrible was not to be baffled thus. "Don't be frightened of me," she said, assuming a more gentle air. In spite of this, however, the children were not inclined to go into her house, so the old woman took hold of them, and in spite of their struggles, she carried them into an underground cellar.

No sooner had the old woman gone away than the prince drew out his magic key and tried to unlock the door with it, but the lock was so high that neither of the children could reach it.

When this discovery was made out came the princess' handkerchief and down came the tears, and she cried and cried until they found themselves surrounded by water. Do all he could, Prince Emerald was not able to console her. She cried until she was tired out, and at last they laid themselves down on an old table that stood in a corner and fell off to sleep.

And then when they awoke they found themselves floating with the waves.

The princess had been crying so long that the water in the cellar was some inches deep. Suddenly the table seemed to lift itself up and floated close up to the door, so they stood upright on it, and were now able to reach the lock. They soon opened the door and saw in front of them a narrow stairway. After climbing it they found themselves in a large hall, but to their dismay they could see no exit. On further examination, however, they saw a gold ring, embedded in the wall. They gave it a very hard pull and the wall slid noiselessly away and they were in front of a large garden with a gate at the other end; so off they ran and in a few minutes reached the gate.

Prince Emerald opened it with his magic key and out they went. In about five minutes they found themselves by their father's palace and a very hearty welcome they got after their long absence.

After they had told their father and mother all about their adventure and how unkindly they had been treated by Old Mother Terrible, their father was very angry, and said he would have the witch punished. So he called up his fighting men and sent two of them to bring the old woman to him. When she came she was frightened nearly out of her wits, and begged so hard to be let off from punishment, and promised always to be good ever afterward that she was set free. She kept her promise, too.

THE UPSIDE-DOWNS OF LITTLE LADY LOVEKINS AND OLD MAN MUFFAROO.

EXCITING TIMES AT THE SEA-SHORE.

(COPYRIGHT, 1904, BY THE NEW YORK HERALD CO.)

Little Lady Lovekins and Old Man Muffaroo, their bathing suits in a bag, go down to the beach for a swim.

"Let's see who gets into the water first," says Muffaroo, as they step into their little dressing-rooms.

Lovekins dives first, with the old man close at her heels. The water is warm, and everything seems just perfect!

Lovekins has lots of fun with a piece of driftwood, and a nice woman, whose back hair is loose, plays with her.

Suddenly a huge wave breaks over them both. Only the feet of little Lady Lovekins stick out, and only the eyes of the woman.

Lovekins quickly bobs up and rides on top of the wave, but Muffaroo, who has not been doused yet, is down below laughing gaily.
